Railroad Reports Show Prosperity Enjoyed by Dixie

Material Increase in Revenues of Georgia Lines Features Statement to Commission.

RAILROAD STOCKS SHOW GREAT GAIN

All Reports Indicate Lines Are More Prosperous Than Any Time Within Last 25 Years.

Reports on operation filed with the state public service commission and stock market prices of securities of railroads serving Georgia and the southeast last week supplied new and convincing proof that this district is enjoying greater and more permanent prosperity than at any time during the past quarter century.

Reports on operation for September and October filed with the public service commission show that in practically every instance, there has been a material increase in operating revenues and expenses. This applies not only to the larger roads, but to the short-line roads, which now are apparently enjoying greatly improved conditions.

Infallible Barometers.

"There are two infallible barometers of condition of business and its stability in any section of the country," said E. M. Price, rate expert of the Georgia public service commission. "One is the price of securities of railroads serving that territory, and the other the condition of the steel market and consumption of steel in the territory."

Officials of the Atlanta and Lowry National bank indorsed this opinion and referred to records in the bond department of that bank to show the increase in prices of common stock of the leading railroads serving Georgia. The comparison, made between prices today and those of the same stocks two years ago, was startling.

Seven railroads were selected and, taking the low price for their common stock in 1923 on one hand, and the present price for the same stock on the other, the following significant figures were gathered together:

Increases Shown.

	Price of Stock in 1923.	Market Quotations Today.

The upward trend is further shown by the following figures:

Gems Hidden In Trash Box For 2 Hours

Jeweler Selects Odd Hiding Place for Fortune In Jewels.

Hays, Kan., November 7.—How a collection of jewels said to be worth at least $12,000 lay in a trash box for safekeeping for more than two hours one day last August, and how a Hays business man is now looking for the owners of the jewels is the rather remarkable story divulged recently by Herman Tholen, Hays jeweler.

When circus was here last summer the proprietor of the concessions went to a Hays business man with the plea that he was "broke" and asked for a loan on his wife's jewelry. The business man consented so the owner of the jewels took them to Tholen's to estimate their value and then to place them in his safe until he should return. Tholen did as requested but soon after the man had gone he began to wonder whether he might be "holding the sack" for a gang of stickup men. So not to be found with the jewels in his safe he placed them in a box of trash in the rear of the store and left them until the owner called for them two hours later.

A loan was made to the show man, with a definite time limit as to when he would be expected to redeem the valuables. But oddly enough, although the loan was only $2,750, the owner of the jewels has never appeared to claim his property, although the end of the time limit will soon be reached.

The business man who made the loan is a bit dubious as to what he will do with the jewels and is still hoping the show man will appear to take the diamonds, other precious stones and gold off his hands.

FATHER'S DEVOTION FOR 'HUMAN HUSK' TOLD BY DAUGHTER

Tears Course Down Cheeks in Courtroom as Living Daughter Sobs Out Tribute to Parent.

VIVIDLY DESCRIBES SISTER'S AFFLICTION

State Rests After Introducing Only Six Witnesses — Court Refuses To Direct Verdict.

Littleton, Col., November 7.—(AP)—Tears streamed from the eyes of jurors, witnesses and spectators today as Mrs. Frances Bishop, daughter of Dr. Harold Elmer Blazer, on trial for the murder of his 34-year-old daughter, Hazel, told in sob-racked tones the tale of "untold devotion" her father poured on the "human husk," which the defense holds he slew through insanity and "humanitarian impulse."

The aged defendant broke into sobs frequently as the daughter testified, upholding her father's act in taking the life of his first born and her own sister. Half the jurors wiped their eyes and scores of spectators wept while she described the father's love and the helplessness of the "child woman."

Hazel Utterly Helpless.

"She was utterly helpless," declared the witness, whose appearance on behalf of her father became possible when the state rested its case.

"Her body was terribly twisted. She could not walk, could not feed herself and was not able even to brush a fly from her face. The noises she made were animal like and frightened strangers. The sight of her eating was so revolting that I couldn't stand to watch her.

"For 34 years father poured on her the utmost devotion, love and care. He lived for her wholly. His worry over and care for her, I believe, unbalanced his mind and caused him to have the spells that came upon him often after mother died.

"He became morose and gloomy. Her only amusement—I suppose it was amusement for her—was to lie

PLAN REFERENDUM ON EXTRA SESSION

Governor Walker Asks Members of General Assembly To Let Him Know Their Views.

A referendum by mail conducted by Governor Walker probably will decide whether there will be an extra session of the state legislature to pass legislation which has been urged. Every member of the legislature has been asked to write the governor his opinion as to the necessity of the session.

Legislation which would be considered at such a session would include a measure to provide for payment of Confederate veteran pensions by state scrip, and education and highway construction measures. The last legislative session authorized the scrip, but the governor has been unable to dispose of the issue satisfactorily.

Walker's Letter.

The letter address by Governor Walker to the legislators follows:

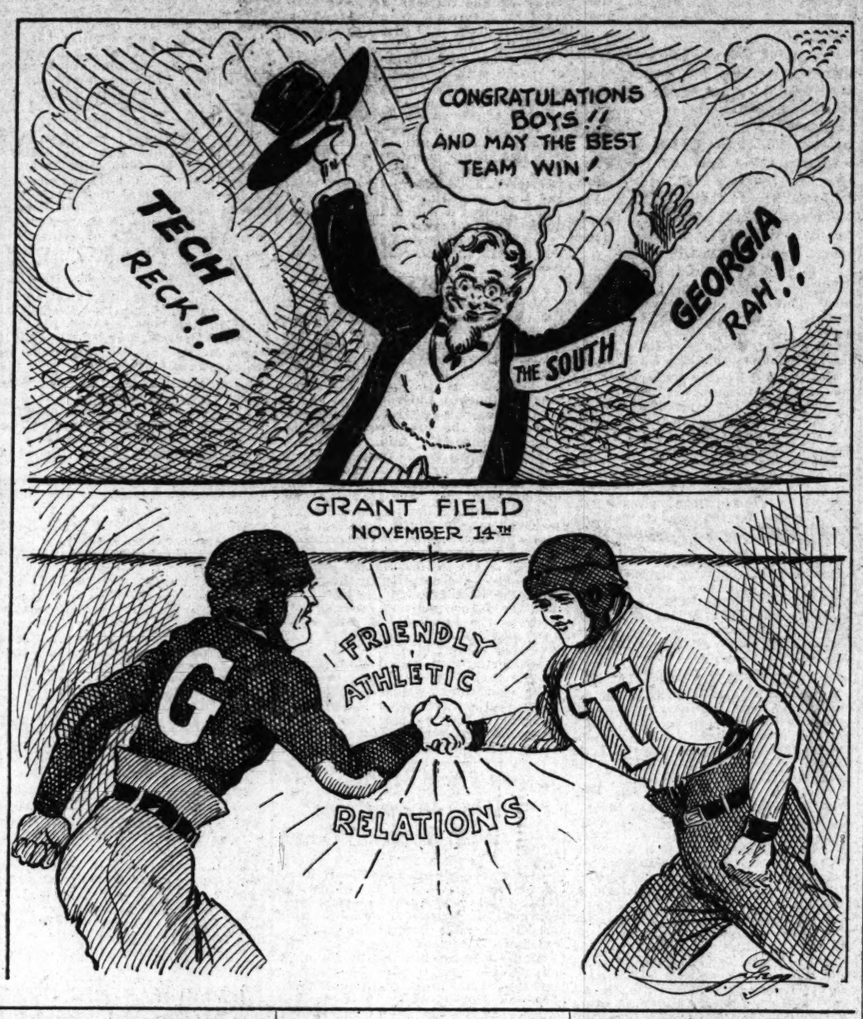

"Three years ago the number of Confederate veterans on the pension roll of my home county was 60; today the number of 30. The pension commissioner advises me that 10 veterans have died in one county since my recent visit to Cuba. Practically all those needing help today will be dead before aid can reach them through a regular session of the legislature. Shall we do something for these helpless ones now?

"I have recently traveled from Cuba to New York, I have observed conditions very carefully. Conservative business men everywhere are united that the eyes of the world are on the south; that the southern states are coming to their own if they will but properly capitalize present opportunities; that men with money are now preferring enterprising states with up-to-date highways, schools and colleges, and they will continue to prefer such states.

"For a number of years Georgia

ITALY IS SEETHING AS CONSPIRATORS ARE ROUNDED UP

Zaniboni Said To Have Confessed and To Take All Responsibility. Scores Under Arrest.

BY FRANCISCO REA.

Rome, November 7.—Italy is seething with excitement as the fascisti round up alleged participants in the thwarted plot to assassinate Premier Mussolini and end the monarchy.

The police assert that they have obtained a confession from Tito Zaniboni, who they say was to have shot Mussolini, and although Zaniboni seeks to take entire responsibility to the huge conspiracy, arrests are being made in most of the larger cities of Italy.

Fifty persons, including the communist deputy, Capocchi, have been seibed by the police at Leghorn, in connection with the plot, and at Naples a brother of General Luigi Capello, held with Zaniboni as one of the leaders, was taken into custody.

Fascist soldiers raided the Unitarian daily newspaper, Lavoro, and after formally occupying the plant, arrested Giovanni Ansaldo, Lavoro's editor, Commander Acquarone, a prominent Mason, and eight others. Thirty others are held on suspicion at Genoa, but have not been formally arrested.

A second general and a Unitarian socialist deputy are reported to be held in Turin, but this report is not confirmed.

Although Zaniboni contends that he had no accomplices, the police insist that it was not his brain alone which planned the ambitious blow at the powerful fascist system. Zaniboni is a former socialist deputy and confidante of the king.

Mussolini is being congratulated from all parts of the world. The poet Gabriele D'Annunzio, close friend of the premier, sent a message by courier which said:

"God protects the brave and loyal servants of the fatherland."

The city of Mantua has decided to recognize the disgrace of Zaniboni, a native son, by expunging his name wherever it appears in the records of municipality.

ADVENT OF PEACE TO BE CELEBRATED

Mass Meeting at Central Presbyterian Church Today To Hear Black and Jones.

The first general Sunday celebration of the signing of the armistice, which ended the world war, will take place today, and in Atlanta a mass meeting will be held at 3 o'clock in Central Presbyterian church. The meeting is to be under auspices of the Christian Council, which has extended an invitation to all Atlantans to take part.

The primary purpose of the gathering is to create interest in the world court, entrance of the United States in this institution looking toward peace, which has been before the senate for some time past.

The Atlanta meeting is similar to other gatherings to be held at the Murder Cases In 1925 Break Fulton Record

Seventy-Three Indictments Are Returned in First Nine Months.

The nine months of 1925, ending with November 1, saw the largest number of indictments for murder in the history of Fulton county, according to statistics made public Saturday by Lewis P. Jones, chief clerk in the office of Solicitor General John A. Boykin. The report shows that 73 persons have been indicted since January 1.

More than 27 per cent of those indicted for murder are fugitives from justice, 20 alleged criminals being at large, according to Mr. Jones' report.

Nineteen persons, or 26 per cent of those indicted, have been convicted in Fulton superior courts. Only one was given the death penalty, and seven were given life sentences.

Eighteen per cent of the number indicted were found not guilty by juries in the two criminal divisions of the county court, there being 13 persons acquitted. Two cases were nol prossed by the solicitor general.

Grand juries before whom various murders have been unfolded by the solicitor general have failed to indict only three accused persons during the nine months' period.

Sentences varying from 8 to 20 years have been meted to convicted persons in four cases, one receiving 8-10 years, a second 12-20 years, a third 15-20 years and one given the maximum penalty for voluntary manslaughter 20 years. Three others have been given sentences of from 1 to 20 years for involuntary manslaughter, according to the digest.

There are 14 murder cases on the calendar and probably will be tried before the end of the present year. One accused murderer died in the hospital.

Records show that nearly two persons per week have been indicted for murder so far this year.

CANDLER'S DOCTORS REPORT CONDITION IS "UNCHANGED"

The condition of Asa G. Candler, well-known Atlanta capitalist, Saturday afternoon was reported by attending physicians to be "unchanged."

After a restful night Friday night he was reported to be slightly improved Saturday morning but later in the day his condition was considered grave.

Mr. Candler has been ill for several weeks and has been taken to the hospital twice. Once before he showed so much improvement that he was removed to his home only to be returned following a relapse several days ago.

FRENCH RADICALS OPPOSE PAINLEVE TAXATION PLAN

Socialists Give Plan Cold Reception, Claiming It Falls Short of Capital Levy Asked.

Paris, November 7.—(AP)—Premier Painleve's plan for raising 8,500,000,000 francs to provide for France's debts and restore her finances met with a serious setback today almost as soon as the details of the plan were made known.

M. Painleve had asked that the bills be taken up Monday and hurried through the chamber and senate before the end of the week. The socialists and radicals, however, found that their provisions resembled so little the capital levy which is an essential part of the socialist program, that they would be obliged to reject the bills unless considerably changed.

Committee Gets Plan.

The premier's plan was handed to the finance committee of the chamber today. It is based on the establishment of a sinking fund comprising about six billion francs in new taxes and resources already in the budget for the payment of interest on the floating debt of about 2,500,000,000 francs.

This total amount of 8,500,000,000 francs would be raised annually for 14 years and be administered by a special amortization commission composed of two senators, two deputies, the governor of the Bank of France and other high government officials.

Tax Based on Income.

The plan generally is regarded as a simple rearrangement of M. Caillaux' projects, with the substitution of "special contributions" from property owners, based on incomes and profits for the preceding finance minister's proposed increase of the inheritance taxes.

The socialists consequently gave it a cold reception, declaring that it fell far short of the capital levy they insist upon.

M. Painleve proposed also a general poll tax of 20 francs yearly on all French men and all foreigners residing habitually in France. He declared in presenting the bills that they would provide a safe sinking fund for debts, while leaving the general budget with a surplus of several million.

2 KILLED, 5 INJURED IN AUTO ACCIDENT NEAR JACKSONVILLE

Jacksonville, Fla., November 7.—(AP)—Two persons were killed and five injured, none seriously, late today in an automobile accident near the Camp Johnston site, nine miles southwest of this city.

The dead are: Mrs. Bertha Gaddy, 22; Cora E. Boone, 7 months.

The injured: J. S. Gaddy, 43; Homer Gaddy, 21, husband of the dead woman; Mrs. Thomas Boone, 30, mother of the dead child; Catherine Gaddy, 14; Viola Gaddy, 8 months.

All the persons were of a Green Cove Springs family, originally from St. Louis, Mo.

Hundreds of Thousands of Romans Cheer Selves Hoarse Over Record-Breaking Flight.

'CITED' IN ORDERS 'OF WHOLE NATION'

Record of American Round-the-World Fliers Bettered by 21 Days. Only One Propeller Used

Rome, November 7.—Rome today gave Commander Francesco de Pinedo, returning from his 34,000-mile, round-trip flight to Japan, a triumph comparable to those of the Caesars.

Hundreds of thousands of Romans, clustered along the banks of the historic Tiber, went into a frenzy of cheering when the aviator's hydroairplane came to the river's surface on the twenty-second day after leaving the lagoon Kasumigaura, on the Pacific coast of Japan, near Tokyo.

The reception given de Pinedo and his mechanician, Earnest Campanelli, came at the end of a record-smashing return journey from Japan. Making 18 stages in 22 days, the Italians bettered by 21 days the best previous comparable record, that of the American 'round-the-world fliers last year, who flew from Kasumigaura to Vienna in 43 days.

Welcomed by Mussolini.

Premier Mussolini welcomed the fliers when they reached the reception platform moored in the river, and later, at a great welcome celebration at the Chigi palace, the premier's residence, "cited" them "in the orders of the day of the whole nation."

The weather-beaten Savoia flying boat swooped to the Tiber's surface just at 3 o'clock of a bright, balmy Roman afternoon. The military bands blaring out the royal march and the Fascist hymn were drowned out by the cheering of the crowds that swarmed along the banks, hung in trees and occupied every vantage spot on neighboring buildings.

The first to greet Commander de Pinedo as he set foot on the welcoming platform was his father, the Marquis de Pinedo, into whose arms the flier threw himself as he jumped from

PENSION WARRANT IS TURNED DOWN

Comptroller Refuses To Pay Expenses for Clerical Work in Confederate Scrip List.

Comptroller General William A. Wright has refused to sign a state warrant for $313.14, drawn by Commissioner of Pensions John W. Clark. The amount is to cover clerical expenses involved in drawing up a roll of pensioners eligible to receive payments under the Confederate scrip bill passed by the last legislature and which, it is now contended, is not constitutional.

General Wright claims that the state cannot pay this amount, in excess of the regular appropriation for the support of the pension department, because of a clause in the general appropriations act which bars statehouse officials or departments from drawing any amounts in excess of the specified appropriation named in the bill.

It is contended, however, by Commissioner Clark, and he is supported in this view by State Auditor Sam J. Slate, that this expense was incurred to furnish the pensioners' roll to the governor, on the specific instructions of the chief executive, and that therefore the money should be paid from the governor's contingent fund. The item covering this contingent fund in the general appropriations act, reads that it "shall include . . . any clerical help the governor may, in his discretion, deem necessary."

Governor Walker has asked Attorney General George M. Napier for an opinion on the point at issue.

Governor Walker is now considering calling a special session of the legislature to clear up the clouded situation surrounding the Confederate scrip bill. The measure directs the state to pay overdue pensions by scrip redeemable in two years. No provision is made for payment of the scrip when it falls due, however, and it is believed that, in any event, the act is unconstitutional in that it is tantamount to bonding the state and issuing state securities without constitutional amendment.

Wales Falls Second Time In Four Days

Prince's Horse Fails To Clear Fence While Chasing Fox.

London, November 7.—The Prince of Wales apparently is going to make this a bumper season for bumps.

For the second time in four days, the heir to England's throne fell from his horse today as he attempted to clear a fence while chasing the hounds of Whaddon chase.

The accident occurred just after the riders had turned up their first fox. Unhurt, the prince quickly climbed to his feet, remounted and rejoined the chase.

The Duke of York was also in the hunting party, but stayed on his horse. The prince and the duke returned tonight from Leighton Buzzard.

FEDERAL AGENTS REPORT SUCCESS IN WAR ON DRUGS

Atlanta Dope Traffic Almost Wiped Out, Says Middlebrooks — Close Watch Kept on Peddlers.

BY BEN COOPER.

The drug traffic has been practically wiped out of Atlanta through relentless prosecution of narcotic smugglers and peddlers by the United States government, and today this city is one of the cleanest in America from this standpoint.

This was the statement Saturday of T. E. Middlebrooks, narcotic agent in charge of the Atlanta district, in discussing activities of government agents in the past few weeks, which have resulted in wholesale arrests of drug peddlers and addicts.

"We maintain an active watch for peddlers and arrest them just about as fast as they show up in the district," Mr. Middlebrooks said. "County, state and city officials are giving us every possible cooperation in the detection of dope peddling and addiction."

Atlanta Clear of Drug.

J. J. Biggins, recently appointed assistant agent in charge, supported Mr. Middlebrooks' declaration with the statement that nowhere in his work all over the United States has he found a clearer district than the Atlanta territory.

The national traffic now is declining, though it has seemed on an increase due to the publicity given the narcotic evil, Mr. Middlebrooks said. Judge Samuel H. Sibley, of the United States district court, in a recent charge to the federal graund jury remarked that the narcotic addiction is decreasing rapidly.

Concrete evidence of the fruit borne by government efforts to check the dope evil is shown in a statement from the Atlanta federal penitentiary that approximately one-third of the present inmates are in prison for violation of the Harrison Narcotic act. With a population of approximately 3,000, this means that there are nearly a thousand inmates who have been con-

WINTRY WEATHER DUE HERE MONDAY

Clearing of Skies and 30-Degree Temperature Is Predicted for Section By Von Herrmann.

Light rains early Sunday morning followed by a rapid clearing Sunday afternoon and a drop in the mercury is the forecast of C. F. von Herrmann, local meteorologist. The temperature will drop to 30 degrees by Monday, according to the report.

This lowered temperature is the result of a severe storm raging in Oklahoma and moving northeast. Mississippi and Alabama probably will experience a few squalls, but on account of the rapid movement of the storm only slight effects of it will be felt in Georgia, Mr. von Herrmann said.

The lowest mark ever recorded for November 9 is 26 degrees, and the drop to 30 degrees on Monday will be near the record.

LAST OF SAVANNAH "BIG FOUR" FREED BY PAROLE ROUTE

Sam Goldberg Released Saturday—Declines To Make Statement Before Leaving for Home.

25 CINCINNATIANS INCLUDED IN LIST

Men Accused of "Selling Protection" to Offenders—Convicted of Conspiracy Charge.

Sam Goldberg, last of the "big four" Savannah rum ring at the Atlanta federal penitentiary, was released on parole Saturday, and paroles for 25 former Cincinnati policemen, who are serving terms for conspiracy to violate the prohibition laws, were received. This is said to be one of the largest parole orders ever received at the prison.

The paroles were signed by Attorney General J. G. Sargent and are reported to have been telegraphed. Warrants ordering the release of the men are said to have been mailed from Washington.

Federal prison officials declined to affirm or deny receiving the order to free the Cincinnatians.

Ringleaders Released.

The release of Goldberg and the Cincinnati group practically clears the Atlanta federal penitentiary of nationally-known liquor law violators. Other members of the Savannah gang, George Remus, millionaire Cincinnati bootleg king, and other notorious offenders have been paroled or served their terms.

Four members of the Cincinnati ring were paroled last Sunday and the 25 who were ordered released Saturday makes the total from Cincinnati 29 — the largest number from any one city. With these releases all the policemen and prohibition officers from this city will have been freed.

Those reported to have been ordered released are A. Houston, George Sand, William Dubach, J. W. Hoffman, Louis Sundarmen, Everette Athey, C. A. Goocke, A. J. Gambs, E. L. Bross, Ralph Guethline, H. A. Hartley, Albert H. Weiss, F. W. Glinkmeir, F. J. Bullerdick, James Hayes, Robert Kinney, J. G. Joachin, Michael Ohmer, Clifford Harding, George Frank, E. D. Biswell, C. W. Hutchinson, C. E. Hillsbury and Harry Freeburg.

Sergeant John Heidenreich, Patrolmen Haff and Donovan and Prohibition Agent "Red" Mitchell were ordered freed last Sunday.

Prison rules prevent publication of the time the men leave the institution, but they will not leave until the official discharge order is received from Washington.

The breaking up of the Cincinnati gang was regarded by federal enforcement agents as one of the greatest and most successful drives ever launched has been in a rut. It is my deliberate judgment that the other states of the south will far outstrip us if we do not now adopt an active and progressive highway and school and college program. If they do outstrip us the disgrace will be on the administration of which you form a material part.

Outlines Conditions.

"If the members of the assembly will indicate to me their desire to secure money to pay the veterans, and to go forward in the progressive programs outlined, I am ready to take the lead, call an extra session and stand my full share of any criticism which may follow. If, on the other hand, the membership is satisfied with present conditions or is willing to let the people say whether they are satisfied, there can be no profit in an extra session and the blame for any loss on account of delay must rest on the members of the assembly.

"I am presenting the matter to you just as clearly as I know how, to put Georgia on the map you must not only be willing to vote to give the people a chance to pass on these constructive measures, but must go forward and be willing to give and take in agreeing upon details and forms of measures to be submitted to the people. Are you willing thus to go forward with me in the effort to built a greater Georgia?

ONE OF 3 NEGROES WHO MADE ATTACK ON OFFICERS SLAIN

Tampa, Fla., November 7.—(AP)—Officers J. E. Madson and T. S. J. Williams were attacked by three negroes and battered over the head with bricks while they were raiding a restaurant here tonight.

One of the negro assailants, Toby Kelly, was killed, and another negro, Mack Newman, was wounded as he ran. A third negro escaped.

The officers received severe lacerations of the scalp and were bruised about the face. Madson was bitten on the shoulder.

Trouble preceding the fight originated when three negroes, two with bricks in their hands, and another apparently holding a revolver, halted Officer Williams as he passed out after searching the restaurant for liquor

3 PERSONS HURT NEAR VALDOSTA

Valdosta, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—Ed Harrold, secretary of the Macon Rotary club, sustained serious injuries early today in an automobile wreck on the national highway four miles south of here. He is in a local hospital with one arm broken and the other dislocated, and is suffering from internal injuries.

The wreck occurred when the automobile in which Mr. Harrold was driving northward with J. P. Striplin, of Macon, collided with another machine, being driven southward by Walter Cullen, of New Jersey, and his family, en route to Florida. Although both cars were badly demolished, no other injuries were reported.

J. S. Mullinax and G. A. Mullinax, brothers, of Elberton, Ga., received painful bruises in an autmobile collision which occurred at midnight 10 miles south of here on the national highway.

The Mullinax brothers were driving toward Valdosta in their automobile, when they collided with a machine being driven southward by a negro, Samuels, accompanied by a party of six other negroes.

Samuels, who gave his home as Punta Gorda, Fla., is being held here for trial on charges of reckless driving.

VETERAN POLICEMAN PASSES IN MACON

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The funeral of Dan W. McCoy, 71, veteran member of the police force, was largely attended at the Tattnall Square Baptist church at 11 o'clock Saturday morning. The pastor, Rev. H. M. Fugate, conducted the services.

Mr. McCoy had been on the police force nearly 20 years, being appointed shortly after he moved to this city from the Rutland district. He was taken ill two weeks ago. Three daughters and two sons survive.

SUCCESS REPORTED IN WAR ON DRUGS

victed and sentenced for violations of the narcotic act.

Spasms of Hysteria.

Mr. Middlebrooks remarked that the general public is not aware of real conditions in the dope peddling industry, and that as a result of this lack of information, there have been spasms of hysteria which have magnified the dope evil.

Discussing reports that the use of morphine and cocaine is being spread among children through "snow parties" given by dope peddlers, he said that as a general rule, such parties are myths.

"People have strange ideas of just what dope is," Mr. Middlebrooks said. "For instance, while morphine is one of the bitterest drugs known, and is extremely nauseating, I have found persons who imagined that it was sweet and could be fed to children in candy. Such a thing would be practically impossible, for the child would throw the candy away at the first bitter bite and in addition would probably become very sick for a while."

Most morphine addicts, he said, become such through "hitting the pipe," or smoking opium. "A very large percentage of addicts to morphine were made in that way," he declared. "For morphine is more powerful than opium, and they try it for a new 'kick' or thrill. And in the case of opium," he said, "the scent is so strong that if opium is smoked in a room, the odor lingers for about a month."

Pipes Are Confiscated.

One of the principal items in the lessening of the opium traffic is that whenever a capture is made the pipes are confiscated. This means that new pipes must be secured at great expense by the addicts if they are to continue the smoking, as the pipes are costly, and are good only when they have been smoked for years and have a thick caking of burnt opium in the bowl.

Large seizures of smuggled narcotics have been responsible to a large degree for reducing the dope consumption in America, he said, for the government has a very efficient system for the prevention of narcotic smuggling, and has been making many successful raids.

Heroin addiction has practically been stamped out, Mr. Middlebrooks said, chiefly because of the high cost of the drug and the lack of success the heroin smugglers have met with. This is the most dangerous of drugs, having the most powerful effect of any narcotic.

"Coke sniffing," or the use of cocaine, is one of the most popular practices of drug addicts, but this, too, is gradually coming under the effects of the government ban, he declared.

his machine. He then received the congratulations of the premier and members of the cabinet.

Used Only One Propeller.

At the Chigi palace, both the premier and Commander de Pinedo made brief speeches from the balcony.

The pilot, in an interview later, emphasized that he had flown the entire 34,000 miles with the same propeller. He said he and Campanelli looked to their own resources alone for repairs and that they never ate but one meal a day, this consisting of eggs and port wine.

"We created enormous curiosity," the aviator said, "when we landed on the sacred Ganges at Benares, in India, and thousands of frightened natives watched us descend and then fled for their lives. In Dutch New Guinea, where we descended in a wilderness, the natives, still said to be cannibalistic, worship the figure of a fat pig. As a mark of deference, they proclaimed me 'honorary hog'; I was not harmed and was worshiped."

The Italian aviators, who left home last April, covered their route in 370 flying hours.

ADVENT OF PEACE TO BE CELEBRATED

same time in cities throughout the nation, and while it is intended to arouse sentiment for the world court, no expression of this sentiment will be asked from the audience.

The program will include a "silent period," during which those at the meeting will pay a tribute of two minutes to those who died on Europe's battlefields. A trumpet will sound "roll call" to open this period.

Speakers will be Eugene Black and the Rev. M. Ashby Jones, both of whom will express their views on the world court. Robert C. Alston will preside.

Armistice day falls on Wednesday of this week, but churches throughout the nation will be united today in general celebration of the beginning of peace and in the interest of the world court.

Indication of Prosperity.

This remarkable showing is an accurate and fair summary of the increase in business prosperity in Georgia and other states of the southeast during that period, according to J. A. Brown, of the bond department of the Atlanta & Lowry National bank.

"Despite the comparatively high level of many of these stocks today," he added, "they are splendid buys right now. For the southeast is merely beginning the march to a manufacturing, commercial and financial expansion which, in a few more years, will turn the eyes of all the world to this region."

Vice President R. B. Pegram, of the Southern railway, commenting on the rise in stock quotations for his own and other roads, pointed out that this national recognition of its leading railways has done more to attract attention to the south as a desirable field for investment than any other one thing.

Good Service Necessary.

Mr. Pegram spoke particularly of the mutual interests of the railways and other branches of southern industry.

"People do not wish to locate themselves or to invest their money except in communities and sections where they feel assured of good railway service. Such service can be furnished only by railways enjoying a sufficient degree of prosperity to enable them to command the capital with which to provide necessary facilities.

"For years the Southern and other leading lines serving the south have been building up their properties, turning profits from operation back into improvements. It was a long, hard process with many disappointments and delays but the results show that it was amply justified. That list of stock quotations is answer enough.

"The most important thing is, of course, that the south now has railway facilities for which no one need apologize. Of almost equal importance is the fact that this has become recognized over the country as well as in the south itself."

Railroad Earnings Greater.

Chairman Paul B. Trammell, of the Georgia public service commission, pointed out that the earnings of the railroads in the southeast are now greater than in any other part of the country. This, he declared, is corroboration of the story of sectional prosperity and promise for the future shown by the rise in railroad securities.

"As a matter of fact," said Mr. Trammell, "this commission is at this time quoting the earning figures of the different railroads, as furnished by themselves and based on their own property valuations, as an argument against a proposed freight rate increase in the western territory. Railroads are earning a greater return in the southeast today than in any other section of the country, yet if the increase is granted in the west, it will be ratepayers in the southeast who will have to meet that increase on all shipments between the two sections.

"And we contend," he continued, "that with the railroads in the southeast enjoying the present prosperity if there are any melons to be cut the public in the southeast should share in them instead of paying more freights to the railroads in the west."

Net Income Shown.

Chairman Trammell and Mr. Price then referred to the reports furnished by the railroads. These showed that the total net operating income for all class one roads operating in the southeast during the eight months ending August 31, 1925, was $102,-208,162. For the same period one year ago, or for the first eight months of 1924, the corresponding figure was $87,968,972.

The rate of return on the book value of the various properties as fixed by the roads themselves during 1925 was 5.86, said Mr. Price, while in 1924 it was 5.22.

Class one, he explained, includes all roads with a gross operating income of one million dollars or more annually.

"One of the most striking proofs of the improvement in business and industry in the southeast during the past two years," said Chairman Trammell, "is seen in the fact that in December, 1923, there were six class one lines operating in this territory which showed a deficit in their operations for that year.

"In 1924 there were two lines showing a deficit, while today there are none."

Quotations on Steel.

Mr. Price then drew attention to the current market quotations on U. S. Steel, which on Friday of last week soared to a new high level for all time above 137. The previous high record for U. S. Steel common was in 1917 during the war-time boom, when it touched 136⅛.

"Consumption of steel in the southeast during the past two years has been tremendous," said Mr. Price. "That is shown in the freight tonnage record. Of course, railroads are the biggest steel consumers and this condition again goes back to the degree of prosperity in the territory served, which demands heavy building programs by the roads.

"But I am convinced that a large part of the bull market on steel is due to steel consumption in the southeast and, of course, to the heavy orders for future delivery, which demonstrate the certainty of good business still to come, on the part of investing capital."

Mr. Price then stated that figures on file in his office showed that the total operating revenue for the various southeastern lines had largely increased during the past year. "This means," he explained, "that the movement of freight has been greater."

Wines Must Match Table Decorations And Hostess' Gown

Paris, November 7.—(AP)—It used to be that wines had to match the food. But now in ultra-smart restaurants in France, they also must match the table decorations and the color of the hostess' gown.

The dye trust has got in its work on drinks, just as it did on face powders. Harmless colorings have been developed which will do the work. If purple asters afford the color touch to the table, the Chablis with the fish and the Bergundy with the chicken also can be made purple, and the champagne with the sweets and liqueur which follow the coffee can be given the same tone.

The French connoisseur who knows his wines and enjoys their natural color and bouquet scorns the new rainbow effects, which have been designed for foreigners in search of novelty.

FATHER'S DEVOTION TOLD BY DAUGHTER

on the floor and crackle a piece of paper, the only object she could grasp, against her body or on the surface of the floor," Mrs. Bishop said.

Tears streamed down her face and she was assisted from the stand by her husband when the court took a 15-minute recess.

The state rested its case this morning after calling but six witnesses, and the defense began its presentation of testimony after Judge Samuel Johnson overruled a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal.

Depicted as "Child-Woman."

In his opening statement to the jury, H. W. Spangler, of defense counsel, depicted the slain girl as a "child-woman," whose body was "distorted and ravaged by disease."

"Blazer became morose and despondent after his wife died. He became a subject of mild epileptic fits. He did many queer things. Once, while riding in an open automobile, on a bitterly cold day, he asked to be let out so he could walk and 'get some fresh air.'

"He was a Christian and God-fearing man and believed in the immortality of the soul. These things and many others we will show in our testimony," Spangler concluded.

Alienist Testifies for State.

Dr. George A. Moleen, Denver alienist and physician, was the only expert witness summoned by the state in their efforts to prove Blazer sane. He declared Blazer's apparent stupor when he was found with the body of the girl probably was caused either by an opiate or chloroform.

The defense called three character witnesses, who testified as to acts they believed would show that Dr. Blazer was suffering from a mild form of insanity.

Activity of Whites Against Negroes Bared by Darrow

Detroit, November 7.—(AP)—The activities of the Waterworks Improvement association as an agency to thwart the encroachment of negroes in an exclusively white neighborhood were developed by witnesses today under the cross-examination of Clarence Darrow at the trial of Dr. Ossian H. Sweet, his wife and nine other negroes for murder. Darrow heads the defense counsel of which Arthur Garfield Hays, of New York, and five other attorneys are members.

Four witnesses of the shooting of Leon F. Breiner last September 9 by a volley of shots fired from the Sweet home in which 11 negroes were barricaded, occupied the entire court session today. Three of the four admitted membership in the waterworks association, and one of them, Eber D. per, admitted the organization was actively hostile to the Sweets making their home in the neighborhood.

Draper admitted he was in the neighborhood of the Sweet house the night of the shooting and the night before. Darrow asked him what he was doing there and he replied he was curious about the crowds.

"And the people in the Sweet home?" Darrow suggested.

"I suppose so," Draper answered.

Draper appeared to hesitate several times and Darrow demanded:

"Are you reluctant to tell what you know? Do you realize we have 11 persons here charged with an offense for which the penalty is life imprisonment?"

An objection to this was sustained by Judge Frank Murphy.

Russell C. Burns, Edward Wettlaufer and Otto Eberhardt, other eyewitnesses, were the only ones to testify besides Draper. They told of hearing and seeing volleys fired from the Sweet home, of Breiner's falling, fatally wounded, and of the police action in placing the negroes under arrest.

FLORIDA LAND SALESMEN HELD; FRAUD CHARGED

Chicago, November 7.—(AP)—Four officials of the Florida Lloyd's organization are under arrest here charged with using the mails to defraud in the sale of Florida lots.

A. J. Joseph, head of International Lloyds, an Illinois insurance concern; Leon L. Stern, president of the Florida Lloyds; Harry Rosewater and E. G. Mayer were released on bonds, and hearing set for November 12.

Walter Eiseman, another official is being sought.

HUNTSVILLE HIGHWAYS ARE BEING WORKED

Huntsville, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—Madison county road work has made considerable progress during the last few weeks in spite of the rainy weather. It has been the intention of the road authorities to have every road in a complete state of repair by winter and this aim seems near to realization.

The highway between Huntsville and Fayetteville, which is being repaired throughout its whole length of 32 miles, is expected to be finished this month.

by the department. Millions of dollars worth of the contraband is said to have been handled through the syndicate, which was reported to have been the largest and most wealthy in the whole country.

The officers were charged with "selling protection" to offenders, and were convicted of a conspiracy to violate the national anti-liquor laws.

Goldberg Is Silent.

Goldberg declined to make a statement before leaving. He was sent up from Savannah at the same time that the Haars, Richard Bailey and Chester Tuten, members of the "big four," were convicted on charges of a conspiracy to violate the prohibition laws.

Willie Haar, Fred Haar, Carl Haar and Fred Haar, Jr., Bailey, Tuten, George Remus, Morris Sweetwood and Emanuel Kessler were principal government witnesses in the prison bribe plot trials, which resulted in conviction of former Warden Albert E. Sartain and his friend, Heinie Riehl. Former Deputy Warden Looney J. Fletcher and Thomas P. Hayden, formerly Catholic chaplain of the institution, were placed on trial but the jury failed to agree, and no second trial date has been fixed.

Sartain was sentenced to serve 18 months at the same institution over which he presided many months as warden and Riehl drew a term of a year-and-a-day at the same prison. Their cases were appealed to the United States supreme court.

BIRMINGHAM RUM DRIVE NETS 39 ARRESTS

Birmingham, Ala., November 7.—(AP)—Prohibition enforcement officers today continued a drive on Birmingham liquor dealers which up to last night had netted 39 arrests and the confiscation of scores of packages of liquor.

O. D. Jackson, administrator for the tenth federal district, supervised the work and federal dry agents from New Orleans, Montgomery and other cities aided local officers. Special agents, directed by J. D. Taylor, special field operator for the tenth district, had been working all week securing "under cover" information and laying plans for the raid. For the most part this work was done by S. J. Mann and P. M. Needham, of New Orleans.

Not until the federal officers were set to go were city and county police apprised of their plans. Split into squads, each under a chief, the dry agents were supplied with federal warrants secured earlier in the day by Jackson, Taylor and McPherson and sent out simultaneously.

The prohibition violators were taken entirely by surprise and the groups of officers who swooped down upon them in every section of the city kept the federal building crowded with prisoners until a late hour last night.

Practically every type of violator was included in the catch, bootleggers, go-between men, moonshiners and dealers all falling into the dragnet spread by the dry agents.

News of the officers' activities spread with amazing rapidity through the city and one or two alleged offenders are said to have admitted pouring their liquors out before the raid.

Only a small quantity of booze was found in the aggregate, in spite of the large number of arrests and packages confiscated. Deputy Administrator McPherson stated that most of the stuff was "moonshine," with only a negligible quantity of the imported brand.

COUNTESS KAROLYI AGAIN IS REFUSED ADMISSION TO U. S.

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—The state department refused today to grant a renewed request of Countess Karolyi, wife of the former president of the Hungarian republic, for admission to the United States.

James F. Curtis, of the law firm of Curtis, Fosdick and Belkamp, laid the request before Secretary Kellogg. The firm had been retained by the countess.

The secretary, although refusing to change his position in the matter, took under consideration. Mr. Curtis said, an additional request that he make known the specific section of the law and the specific ground upon which admission was refused. A reply to this request is expected by Mr. Curtis Monday.

Coolidge Sees Need To Revive Spirit of Peace

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Wounds of the world war remain, and while the great armies which grounded their guns seven years ago have been demobilized, still there is a constant need to mobilize the spirit of peace, President Coolidge declared today in an appeal for support of the annual membership enrollment of the American Red Cross, beginning Armistice day.

"May that spirit," he added, "be with us all as we move along the path ways of the future.

"We cannot evade, we cannot forget the responsibilities which are ours while a single wound of that war remains unhealed. Our work has still to be done until we reach that plane where we can ask, 'are there no others who need help?' and the answer shall be, 'there are no others.'"

Praising the Red Cross for its widespread and effective relief activities, the president said:

"It is one of the encouraging, the hopeful things in this work of bringing sunlight to dissipate the cloudy aftermath of war that we as a people and a government have the helpful and reassuring service of the American Red Cross. . . .

"The American Red Cross is an organization which, with an impartiality as broad as the earth, has broken down all barriers, mounted the heights and marched unflinchingly onward to succor humanity. This work justifies our faith in mankind.

"The American Red Cross invites all to share in its inspiring responsibilities. It needs strength in numbers; it needs you. Its record of the past is secure; its record of the future will. I am confident, be the better for our standing with it to be counted in this legion of mercy and which strives for the practical application of the golden rule, of peace on earth and good will towards men."

POLICE TO PREVENT LOOTING AT FIRES

Special orders were issued Saturday night by Acting Police Chief E. L. Jett to plainclothes men and patrolmen to keep persons from entering burning building during a fire following what is believed may have been an attempt to rob the L. F. M. store at Whitehall viaduct Friday night.

A false alarm was given to the fire department to the store. As the firemen started to enter the store five or six well-dressed young men also attempted to enter the store. They were stopped by the nightwatchman and firemen. Police believe it was a ruse to get into the store and burglarize it afterwards.

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

PADEREWSKI USES THE STEINWAY EXCLUSIVELY

LOOK through a file of musical programs, old or new. Or read the announcements of musical events in the metropolitan newspapers during the concert season. . . . You will begin to realize the astonishing majority of pianists, singers, directors and violinists who own and use the Steinway piano. And in this group of those who prefer the Steinway you will find the most notable figures, not only among the pianists, but in the entire world of music.

Paderewski, Rachmaninoff, Hofmann, Mero . . . Kreisler, Heifetz, Zimbalist . . . Geraldine Farrar, Ernestine Schumann-Heink, Gogorza . . . Stravinsky, Damrosch, Stokowski. . . . The list is endless. For the Steinway piano is regarded by the foremost musicians as quite necessary to the proper interpretation of music, as indispensable as the score itself.

The Steinway pianos used by these celebrated men and women are made in various styles and sizes to fit all homes and incomes, and to suit the acoustic conditions of the small apartment or the country home. Each embodies all the Steinway principles and methods. Each has the golden singing tone, and the delicate, quick response to the hand and spirit that have long distinguished the Instrument of the Immortals.

And though the Steinway is the inevitable choice of the master pianists and the great musicians, it is never beyond your reach. It has always been sold at the lowest possible price, and upon the most convenient terms. Some one of the various models may be yours, easily and at once. And afterward . . . you will never want, and you need never buy, another piano.

*Any new Steinway may be purchased with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

JAMES MULLARKY DIES AT AUGUSTA

Augusta, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—Joe A. Mullarky, 57, one of the oldest and best known of Augusta dry goods merchants, died here early today following an illness of eight days.

Mr. Mullarky came to August as a young man from Ireland. James A. Mullarky, his uncle, brought Joe Mullarky and J. B. White here from Ireland and gave them employment in a mercantile business he conducted in this city. Both Joe A. Mullarky and J. B. White later entered business for themselves. Mr. White, died about 10 years ago, leaving an estate valued at from four to five million dollars.

Besides his widow and one son, J. A. Mullarky, Jr.? Mr. Mullarky is survived by two brothers and one sister, who live in Ireland, and a brother, William J. Mullarky, who lives here.

Charity Official Resigns.

Little Rock, Ark., November 7.—(AP) E. D. Chipman, chairman of the state board of charities and corrections, today tendered his resignation to Governor Terral to become effective January 1, 1926. Mr. Chipman will enter private business in Little Rock.

Florida Man Admits Slaying Of Sister-in-Law

Tampa, Fla., November 7.—(AP)—Her skull crushed with an iron bolt, the partially decomposed body of Mrs. G. W. Stuart was found this morning in a swamp near her home at Gardenville, following the murder confession last night of her brother-in-law, who said his conscience forced him to admit his guilt.

Daniel Stuart, 58, her kin, walked into the office of Sheriff Thomas at Ocala last night and, confessing, told of the crime he committed Tuesday. In his cell at Hillsborough county jail today the "man whose conscience revolted" repeated the story of the killing.

Threw Iron Bolt.

"We quarreled. I threw an iron bolt at her. I didn't think I threw it hard enough to kill her. But it did," he said.

"I threw her body in the marshes nearby and slept in the house that night. My conscience worried me and I went to Tampa the next morning to tell the judge or some official.

"I remained around the courthouse almost all day but I couldn't find anyone to talk with. Later in the day my nerves settled and I forgot about the killing.

Conscience Troubled.

"I started walking for Ocala and I made my way there after picking up rides from passing motorists. I stayed in Ocala until last night and then my conscience forced me to tell the truth. So I surrendered to the sheriff."

Such was the story of the aged Hillsborough county farmer who remained in jail today without bond. He will be charged with murder, officials say.

The body of Mrs. Stuart, which was found about 200 yards from her home upon directions given by her confessed slayer, will be examined today to ascertain if the blow on the head effected her death, officials said. A shotgun, with one shell exploded, was found in the Stuart home by deputy sheriffs last night and they believe Stuart had shot the woman to death.

Amazing New Invention for the DEAF

Not even a headband needed!

Unseen—not even a headband needed—worn in—not on the ear—with absolute comfort

THE midget Phonophor is an achievement of a group of Europe's foremost scientists. Worn without headband . . . practically invisible . . . it has brought acute hearing to thousands of sufferers, among them the most stubborn cases. Men and women who have suffered from deafness for years have slipped this tiny but powerful aid in the ear and at once have heard subdued conversation, the soft strains of music—clearly and with perfect tone accuracy.

Some time ago the Phonophor was introduced and demonstrated in this city with phenomenal results. At the time production was inadequate. Hundreds of people who attended the introduction were unable to obtain their Phonophor . . . other hundreds stayed away because of the limited supply and the crowds. Now conditions are changed, and we are glad to announce that a further demonstration will be held in this city.

4 SOUTHERN STORES PASS INTO HANDS OF RUDOLPH GOERKE

Newark, N. J., November 6.—(AP)—Rudolph J. Goerke, president of the Goerke company, today announced that he had secured a controlling interest in four department stores in the south.

The stores, formerly owned by the City Stores company of New York, were Maison Blanche, New Orleans; Loveman, Joseph and Loeb, Birmingham, Ala.; Lowenstein and Brothers, Memphis, Tenn., and Kaufmann, Strauss company, Inc., Louisville, Ky.

EXPRESS WORKERS DEMAND INCREASE OF 12 CENTS HOURLY

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—The American Federation of Express Workers' Union have made demands for a 12-cent an hour increase in pay from the American Railway Express company and the Southeastern Express company. Revision of working agreements also is asked, but this subject already is before the railroad labor board.

The American company has set December 7 as a date for a conference on the wage demands. No date has been fixed by the Southeastern.

Presbyterian Synod Auxiliary Holds Meet At Marietta Church

Marietta, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The Georgia synodical auxiliary of the Presbyterian church closed a most successful session at the Marietta Presbyterian church Thursday and many plans were outlined for the coming year's work. Mrs. W. A. Turner, president of the auxiliary, presided over the meeting.

Fifty delegates representing various churches in Georgia attended the synodical and were entertanied in the various homes of the church members. On Tuesday night, the executive board of the organization were dinner guests at the home of Mrs. George F. Montgomery on Cherokee street. Following the dinner the board went into an executive session and outlined plans for the auxiliary.

Mrs. W. C. Winsbrough, of St. Louis, who holds the highest office to be obtained in the Southern Presbyterian assembly, gave a round-table talk Wednesday night which was enjoyed. She narrated her travels through Brazil and also her trip to Stockholm, Sweden, as a delegate to the auxiliary. Mrs. Winsbrough is familiar with church missions and her talk was very instructive as well as interesting.

Other speakers who took part in the program were: Mrs. Charlie Askew, Mrs. Rebecca Brown, Mrs. Lee Pridgen, Mrs. Frank Gunn, Mrs. S. H. McWilliams, Dr. J. P. McCallie, Wallace Alston and others.

The synodical adjourned Thursday night after having voted to hold the next session at Augusta.

FAMILY OF THREE OVERCOME BY GAS

Norfolk, Va., November 7.—(AP)—Gas escaping from a leak in a cellar pipe nearly wiped out the family of Charles W. Hall today. Mr. Hall, his wife and 5-year-old daughter, Dorothy, were overcome by the fumes and were worked on for 40 minutes before they recovered.

A neighbor, who was passing the Hall home, detected the odor of gas and traced it to the house. His efforts to arouse the family proved futile and he forced an entrance.

Discovering the three members of the family in their bedrooms he tried to arouse them. Failing in this he summoned a physcian who administered artificial respiration.

BARBARA LA MARR BREAKS CONTRACT

Los Angeles, November 7.—(AP)—The Times says Barbar La Marr, motion picture actress, has broken off her contract with Associated Pictures and First National, through which the Associated releases its films, because of the company's failure to adhere to salary terms in the agreement.

Miss La Marr's attorney is quoted as saying that the actress has recovered almost completely from the breakdown she suffered several weeks ago but will remain in seclusion for the time being.

NINA WILCOX PUTNAM SUED IN LAND TRADE

West Palm Beach, Fla., November 7.—(AP) — Nina Wilcox Putnam, writer, and F. J. Brainard, of Delray, Fla., are made defendants in a suit for specific performance of a $32,400 contract filed in the circuit court here today.

George A. Russo, complainant, claims that he had made arrangements to buy some land from Brainard, and that Mrs. Putnam entered into collusion with Brainard with the design and purpose of defrauding Russo, and getting Brainard to break his contract and sell the property direct to her.

Russo says he lost $32,400 when Brainard refused to sell.

CLUB AT HUNTSVILLE ELECTS NEW OFFICERS

Huntsville, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—The Acme club, one of the live dinner organizations of Huntsville and composed exclusively of young business and professional men, met last night and elected officers as follows: Charles M. Gray, president; Horace T. Woodall, first vice president; Oscar Mason, second vice president.

The installation of officers was made the occasion of a dinner-dance.

M'REA TO SUCCEED GENERAL MENOHER

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—With the retirement for age next spring of Major General Charles T. Menoher, commanding the ninth corps area, San Francisco, Major General James H. McRea, now commanding in the Philippines, is expected to succeed him.

PONZI PURCHASES LAND IN FLORIDA

Jacksonville, Fla., November 7.—(AP)—The Jacksonville Journal today says that Charles Ponzi, declaring in a signed statemeat that he is in Florida to "stage a comeback," and repay the $2,000,000 which he estimates still is owing creditors who lost in his Boston fiasco in 1920, has been in Jacksonville since September 28, living under an assumed name.

Ponzi has been buying Florida land which he will subdivide, the Journal continues, into lots and sell throughout the United States at $10 each. In his signed statement he declared he expected to sell ten million of these.

"The financial wizard has been using the name of Charles Borelli in Jacksonville. Use of the alias was necessary, so he said, in order to avoid undue prominence until he could arrange his plans for a nation-wide land selling campaign.

"Ponzi stated he had paid his debts to society by serving five years minus time off for good behavior, after his conviction in a Massachusetts federal court on a charge of using the mails to defraud in connection with his dealings in international reply coupons in 1920. His purpose in coming to Florida, he maintains, is to repay his creditors before he takes one cent of profit for himself.

"Ponzi is under $10,000 bond, awaiting a hearing of an appeal of his conviction last summer in Massachusetts state court on a charge of larceny by obtaining money on false pretenses."

Negative Side Wins Decision At Emory Debate

Emory University, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The audience, by a rising vote, decided that the negative side won the decision here tonight when the question: "Resolved, That this audience favors the recognition of the existing regime in Russia," was debated by a picked team from Oxford university, England, and by students of Emory university.

The affirmative was represented by H. V. Lloyd-Jones and R. H. Bernays, of the Oxford Debating union, and D. A. Lockmiller, of Emory; the negative was represented by H. J. S. Wedderburn, of England, and J. Q. Maxwell and Ralph Williams, of Emory.

The affirmative side contended that Russia should be recognized because the present government, which is eight years old, is stable and that it is on a sound financial basis. The negative side contended that the government of Russia is not stable and, therefore, should not be recognized. It was also pointed out that Russia had sought to foment a world revolution, and that no war-inclined nation should be recognized by peace-loving countries.

A feature of the debate was the wit and sarcasm of the Englishmen. Dr. Plato Durham, an Oxford man, presided. He complimented the men from the Oxford Debating union in coming to America, pointing to the fact that both Gladstone and Asquith were ex-presidents of the debating union which the Englishmen represent.

The Oxford team is on a tour of the United States and has met 15 of the large universities of the east and west, and go from Atlanta to New York to debate Columbia university on Monday night, with Smith college, at Northampton, Mass., as the final debate of the tour.

Macon Auditorium To Be Opened Soon With Organ Concert

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Henry F. Seibert, reputed to be one of the most famous concert organists in this country, will give the opening concert for the new million dollar city auditorium on the night of Monday, November 23, three days before Thanksgiving day, it was decided at the meeting of the auditorium commission last night.

For weeks the work of installing the big organ—one of the largest in the country—has been in progress.

The ceremony on opening night will be brief. B. J. Dasher, as chairman of the commission that built the structure, will preside. The auditorium will be turned over to the city of Macon and the mayor of Macon in turn will deliver it to the operating commission, which was named a few days ago by Mayor Luther Williams.

The members of the permanent commission are: T. J. Carling, chairman; R. F. Burden, Dr. W. G. Lee and Guy E. Paine.

LARGE SHIPS ENTER PORT AT SAVANNAH

Savannah, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—One of the largest ships ever entering a southeastern port has docked here. The huge liner, Bellerphen by name, is approximately 510 feet in length and drew 24 feet of water in arriving here. The freighter was brought up the river with ease, and berthed for a brief visit to load a cargo for the Far East. The ship is expected to draw 31 feet of water when she sails.

The British steamship Inventor came in port about the same time, and is another ponderous craft in maritime circles. This freighter is only 16 feet shorter than the Bellerphon. It discharged part of its cargo here and sailed for New Orleans.

J. HULL M'CLURE DIES; CITIZEN OF FAIRBURN

Fairburn, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—J. Hall McClure, 59, who for 20 years prior to 1920 was clerk of court of Campbell county, and who for 15 or 20 years was member and chairman of the board of education, died tonight at an Atlanta hospital, following an illness of one week.

He is survived by his widow; two daughters, Miss Janie Beall McClure, of Savannah, and Miss Helen McClure, of Fairburn; three sons, J. D. McClure, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; Guy B. McClure, of Union City, Ga., and Roy McClure, of Atlanta.

Funeral arrangements have not been announced.

Mr. McClure was one of Fairburn and Campbell county's most prominent and popular citizens. Since 1920 he had been engaged in the insurance business here. He was a deacon and chairman of the finance committee of the Fairburn Baptist church and was for many years suprintendent of the Baptist Sunday school. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow.

RAILROAD THEFT RING IS BELIEVED TO BE UNCOVERED

Jackson, Miss., November 7.—(AP)—With the arrest of two white men and four negroes, and the discovery of what is estimated to be more than $2,500 worth of property alleged to have been stolen from parcel post and express shipments, local police believe they have uncovered a theft ring in railroad circles which rivals the largest discovered in the state.

Those arrested are L. A. Redmond, combination baggage and expressman on the local Columbia branch passenger train of the Gulf and Ship Island railroad; M. L. Powell, flagman on the same train; James Howe, negro fireman on the train, two other negro men and a negro woman.

Massengale Agency Adds New Men to Its Big Staff

W. G. HASTINGS.

E. C. CASSADY.

Owing to increased business St. Elmo Massengale, president of the Massengale advertising agency, announces that he had recently made two important additions to his staff in E. C. Cassady and W. G. Hastings.

Mr. Cassady, who assumes the head of the art department of the agency is ranked with the best commercial illustrators in the United States. He comes to the Massengale advertising agency from New York where he conducted a commercial art studio in which he was constantly engaged by national advertisers and leading advertising agencies. He was one of the "Associated Artists" of Philadelphia, an organization of foremost artists. He also has done much magazine illustrating for such publications as Scribner's, Collier's and McClure's.

Mr. Hastings, well-known advertising man, is a native Atlantan. With the exception of a few years spent in New York and other commercial centers he has spent all of his time in the south. He began his advertising career 19 years ago in Atlanta and since that time has conducted many successful advertising campaigns in the United States, Canada and England. He is considered an authority on the merchandising and advertising of drug store and grocery store products.

The Massengale advertising agency was established in 1896 by St. Elmo Massengale, the present president, and is the oldest advertising agency in the south. Mr. Massengale himself was recently honored by being selected as national secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, an organization composed of the foremost advertising agents of the United States.

According to Mr. Massengale the great increase in the advertising being handled by his agency, which has made necessary a considerable enlargement of the working force, as well as the establishment of a branch office in Miami, presages an era of prosperity in the south.

M'DONOUGH MAY GET BIG PACKING PLANT

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—There is danger that Macon will lose the big plant of the Continental Packing corporation, located on the site of old Camp Wheeler, eight miles from this city.

It was in this plant that R. F. Willingham, former head of the Willingham Warehouse and other enterprises, put huge sums of money, causing his financial collapse before he could get the institution operating on a paying basis.

The plant passed into the hands of the Continental Packing corporation, after the failure of Richard Willingham.

It became known here last night that the city of McDonough is negotiating with the Continental Packing corporation to move the entire plant to that city.

Most of the pimento peppers, the canning of which forms a big part of this company's business, come from Jackson and McDonough and in that territory.

The pepper crop was a failure this year. The company had a successful peach pack, but is not canning sweet potatoes, because of the high prices.

Meanwhile taxes and water rents are mounting, the water department charging the company $2,400 a year for its supply, as a minimum rate.

That the company is giving considerable attention to the efforts of McDonough to obtain the plant, is admitted by local officials, but no action has been taken.

DONALDSON LEAVES EARLY THIS WEEK TO GET "BUNCOERS"

Bert Donaldson, special investigator for Solicitor General John A. Boykin, of Fulton county, will leave Tuesday for Washington, D. C., where he will receive necessary papers from the state department for George Kennedy and Charles McCord, alleged members of the Floyd Woodward "bunco syndicate," arrested recently in London by Scotland Yard detectives.

Mr. Donaldson will carry a special request from Governor Clifford Walker to the state capitol for the papers and when he secures them will leave immediately for London, it was announced Saturday.

McCord and Kennedy are under indictments charging larceny after trust in Fulton county and also are wanted by the United States government for alleged misuse of the mails. They are being held for United States authorities, according to information transmitted to Solicitor Boykin from Secretary of State Frank Kellogg.

Cunard Line To Begin New Service of Ships For Cabin Tourists

Due to the rapid growth of cabin trans-Atlantic travel, the Cunard line has established a new service with seven ships running between New York and Plymouth, Cherbourg and London, sailing from New York every Saturday, local offices announced Saturday.

This new service offers travelers an opportunity to secure cabin accommodations to Europe at a minimum rate of $145. Steamers put into the new service are the Caronia, Carmania, Dameronia, Antonia, Ascania, Ausonia and Lancastria.

Because of the popularity of the new tourist third cabin plan of travel, these steamers also will carry tourist third cabin passengers in addition to cabin passengers. When this feature is inaugurated on May 1, the ordinary third class business will be excluded, officials asserted.

First Audience Rehearsal

The Conductor and His Audience FOR BIG SYMPHONY CONCERTS

BY H. KNOX SPAIN

Seventy schooled instrumentalists—3,000 eager "listeners" assembled for "dress rehearsal" for the twenty-first concert of the Atlanta Symphony archestra, Enrico Leide, conductor—the premiere of the third season.

To quote from the series of last year, "there is a unique unit in this great achievement—the audience. This unit is assigned a part vastly important and needs fine-point rehearsing along with the orchestra. By spending a few minutes "rehearsing" on what an orchestra is and does the "onlooker" and "listener" will find an increase in enjoyment of the concerts. The "rehearsals" will take on the form of weekly articles to be known as "Audience Rehearsals."

The two great units are ready for the master baton—the orchestra in four sections, "string," "wood-wind," "brass" and "percussion"—the audience in two sections, "onlooker" and "listener."

Arrangement of Orchestra.

Conductor Leide, to even the tone balance of the orchestra, is departing from the former arrangement of seating the players. To his left will be the first violins in two rows, adjoining these to the left, the second violins; to his right, the wood-winds, with the harp finishing the group; adjoining to the right will be the violas. The cellos will occupy the center of stage. The double basses flank the left center, the brasses the right and the tympani and percussion instruments the middle center. In the string section the players are Standring, concert master; Robkin Jackson, assistant concert master; Pomar, Hubner, Cruselle, Mueller, Klaber, Landis, Gunter, Gilbreath, Chase, Matthiessen, Pathe, Basamajan, Wade, Proger, Pause, Geffen, Lawler, Rittenbaum, Effel, Buchanan, Wetzel, Bearden, Leffingwell, Sorenson, Siegert, Bushman, Thompson, Gasca, Hulce, Wharton, Bearden, Foretich, Matthiessen, Carrier, Jones; the "woods," Capelli, Roman, Wilhoit, Wolpert, Schoenlein, Mayhan, Correa, Johns, deGarland, Hopson, the "brasses," Holmes, Davis, Ferrant, Bumstead, Bremer, Urban, Kennedy, Sharp, Hughes, Dailey, Schiller, Barber; in the percussion section, Glaser, orchestra business manager; Frank Verdi and Adolph Verdi; at the harp, Mrs. Griffith; at the organ, Moore.

Leide has selected for the first program from the works of Von Weber, Mendelssohn, Bartholdy, Glazounov, Wagner and Berlioz.

The master baton is raised, the signal is given—the strong down stroke is made—we hear.

The Program.

1. Overture Preciosa—Carl Maria von Weber (1786-1826). The overture is built in three movements. The first is a sort of Spanish bolero. The second is a march based on a gypsy theme. The third is a straight 4-4 movement, elaborating on the gypsy theme. The composition is pure and classic throughout.

2. Rondo Capriccioso, Opus 14—Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy (1809-1847). This familiar old rondo, originally written for the piano, is arranged for the orchestra by Jungnickel. The introduction, an andante, is a violin solo with string and wood wind accompaniment. The presto, played by the wood wind and strings and finale with the brasses is most effective. The composition is a veritable ballet of sylphs and elves dancing down moonlit glades.

3. Bacchanal, from "The Seasons"—Alexander Glazounov (1865-1924). This is a Russian sketch. There are two parts, Autumn and Winter. Autumn describes the rustling of leaves and the blowing of the wind; Winter, the sleigh bells, the snows and the dreary Russian steppes.

TEN MINUTES INTERMISSION.

Part Two.

4. Siegfried-Idyll—Richard Wagner (1813-1883). The Idyll contains most of the leading motifs from all Wagner's music dreams. He was inspired by his first son, Siegfried, and jotted down notes for the composition when the birth was announced. The notes remained and are explained by the following lines, the English version by Edward Oxenford:

It was thy will, so brave and sacrificing,
Which found the place wherein my work should be;
Thy presence here, all turmoil exorcising,
Gives life and strength to work for thee and me;
And here the world of heroes is arising,
As in our home we distant scenes can see.
Amidst my labours came a voice enthralling:
"A son is there!"—him Siegfried we are calling.

If I for both in song now lift my praises,
What fairer form could thanks for love-gifts take?
At home we cherished them in all their phases,
And here calm joys to melody awake.
Each theme that in our hearts such rapture raises,
Shall also for our son Siegfried make,
If thy sweet grace be now once more approving
What has, like music, long our souls been moving.

5. March Racoczy, from "Damnation de Faust"—Hector Berlioz (1803-1869). There is associated with the march an interesting bit of romance. It is the national air of Hungary and was originally written by Michael Barna, a gypsy count musician of Prince Franz Rakoczy, from whom the composition takes its name. Although the manuscript was kept in the Barna family, the theme was used and adapted by many Hungarian musicians. Berlioz borrowed his version from that of Russitka and employs it in the dramatic closing of the first act of "Damnation of Faust." There are two themes, (1) rather somber in A minor, (2) brilliant in A major. The finale is sustained by three trombones and tuba in unison.

The next "rehearsal" will concern the "choirs" of the orchestra and the program characteristics.

Pity the Weak Skinny Children

Nature's greatest health builder and strength giver is Cod Liver Oil—it's full of vitamines of the first class—everyone knows that.

But pity the poor children—how can they take this nasty, nauseating stuff that invariably upsets their small, delicate stomachs?

Most of them can't and now—thank goodness—none of them have to.

For now Cod Liver Oil comes in tasteless sugar-coated tablets, that are as easy for the kids to take as candy and they sure do build up the youngsters in double quick time.

So mothers, if any one of your loved ones is frail and peaked or isn't feeling right just ask Jacobs' Pharmacal Co. or any druggist for a box of McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Compound Tablets—60 tablets 60 cents.

One sickly, thin child aged 9 gained 12 pounds in seven months and now plays daily with other children.

Splendid for any run-down, weak, skinny, nervous man or woman—thousands of boxes are sold daily—but be sure and ask for McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Compound Tablets—the original and genuine. Try them for 30 days and if you aren't delighted with the improvement your druggist is authorized to hand you back the money you paid for them—(adv.)

Minister Thankful

"I had stomach trouble for nearly 20 years, also constipation which filled my system with gas and fever. I could not do my work, and while I was down sick a lady from out of town sent me a bottle of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy which proved truly wonderful. I believe it is the best medicine on earth." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. One dose will convince or money refunded. Jacobs' Pharmacy and druggists everywhere. —(adv.)

Aspirin Gargle in Sore Throat or Tonsilitis

Prepare a harmless and effective gargle by dissolving two "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" in four tablespoonfuls of water. Gargle throat thoroughly. Repeat in two hours if necessary.

Be sure to use only the genuine Bayer Aspirin, marked with the Bayer Cross, which can be had in tin boxes of twelve tablets for few cents.—(adv.)

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

"No girl or woman should 'purge' and 'physic' herself every few days. This is very injurious. Besides, it isn't necessary."
—DR. CALDWELL

Million Girls and Women Have Changed Laxatives

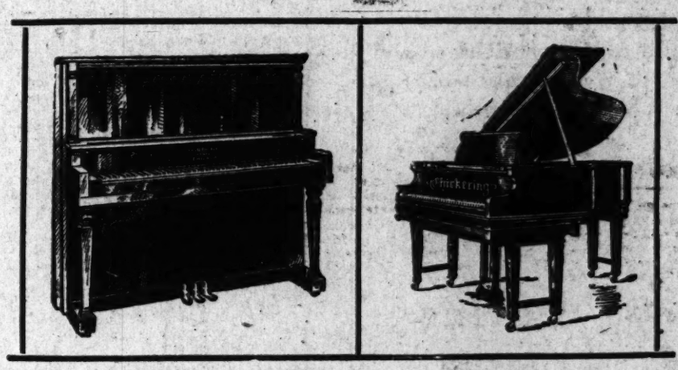

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves every few days to avoid sick headaches, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, cold, or sour, gassy stomach.

They now take a laxative only occasionally. They have found that one dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will establish natural, healthy bowel movement for weeks at a time, even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement, but, best of all, it is often months before another dose is necessary. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

WRITERS TO SPONSOR LECTURE BY WIGGAM

Albert Edward Wiggam, widely known in the realm of science on two continents, will lecture at the Atlanta Woman's club on November 12 on "What Is Civilization Doing to Progress?" The lecture is being sponsored by the Atlanta Writers' club, and the public is invited to attend.

Mr. Wiggam's recent book, "The New Decalogue of Science," has been favorably commented upon. Edward Alsworth Ross says "Galton, founder of eugenics, hoped to see it sweep the world like a new religion and here is Mr. Wiggam equipped with learning, fervor, imagination and a sparkling literary style, who is doing a lot to realize Galton's dream."

Tickets for the lecture may be had by calling the office of Russell Bridges, 1221 Wynne-Claughton building, or through the Atlanta Woman's club.

Woolford To Speak To Personnel Body On Thursday Night

Cator Woolford will address the Personnel association next Thursday night at 6 o'clock on "Budgeting Your Personnel Needs." The meeting will be at the Blackburn tea room, 42½ Peachtree street.

Mr. Woolford has devoted much time and study to this problem, which deals with estimating employment needs in advance, and planning ahead for an efficient personnel in a business, and will show haw large organizations anticipate employment problems in order to employ and properly train the right people to handle the work.

MRS. E. W. CARPENTER TO BE LAID TO REST

Funeral services for Mrs. E. W. Carpenter, 24, of 126 Bonaventure avenue, who died at her home Friday night, will be held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the H. M. Patterson & Son chapel. The Rev. A. M. Pierce will officiate. Interment will be in Hollywood cemetery.

Mrs. Carpenter is survived by her husband, one daughter, Miss Christine Carpenter; a sister, Miss Julia Bone; and three brothers, Henry, Charles A., and Oliver H. Bone. Captain Casper Bone, of the fire department, who was killed in the Decatur street cotton warehouse first last spring, was her brother.

GEORGE R. LAW DIES AT RESIDENCE HERE

George R. Law, 59, of 563 North Jackson street, died at the home Saturday morning after an illness of several months. He was a native of Alabama and came to Atlanta about 40 years ago. He was in the haberdashery business here for 25 years, retiring about six years ago.

Mr. Law is survived by his widow, one son, Elise Law, of Tampa, Fla. Funeral arrangements will be announced today.

URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

The community chest campaign is on. The campaign starts Monday, at which time special committees will solicit contributions and pledges for 1926. During 1925 eight social agencies among our people will receive $30,000. For 1926 the participating colored agencies will receive $33,000. Since the chest began operation social agencies for and by colored people have had their annual budgets increased from $12,000 to $33,000 which is an increase of 36 per cent. It is therefore seen how essential it is that we shall keep our agencies in the chest and rally to the support of the chest campaign. Every one is urged to give freely and work freely in the campaign.

Possibly the largest delegation attending a state convention will go to Brunswick, Ga., on Monday, November 9, to attend the 55th session of the Georgia state convention. This convention is composed of the largest number of men and women from all sections of Georgia, who have reputations as state and national leaders in religious, educational, welfare and inter-racial cooperation. It represents a constituency of 560,000 in Georgia and 4,000,000 in the nation. This convention will be asked by Atlanta churches to assist in bringing the national Baptist convention to Atlanta in 1927 with its 10,000 delegation. The outlook for a constructive and record-breaking session is very evident.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock there will be a public mass meeting at the Paramount theater. Colonel A. T. Walden will speak on "Registration and the $12,000,000 Bond Issue." Dr. P. James Bryant will also speak on "Registration." Hon. B. J. Davis, national committeeman for Georgia will tell us about "Bonds and Regisfitration." Other prominent citizens will participate. Everybody is cordially invited to this important meeting.

INDIANAN TO SPEAK TO ATLANTA EAGLES

Robert E. Proctor, of Indiana, will address a mass meeting of Atlanta citizens Monday night at 7:30 o'clock in the interest of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mayor Walter A. Sims will introduce him to the audience, which will be assembled at the Chamber of Commerce building, hall No. 1. Mr. Proctor, a young politician of Elkhart, Ind., is making a tour of several southern states, speaking in the larger cities. He will be orator of the day at the Armistice day celebration in Savannah following Wednesday and also will address the Eagles in that city.

The mass meeting Monday is under the auspices of the Atlanta lodge of Eagles and is a forerunner of a membership drive which will continue for several weeks.

The Fraternal Order of Eagles in the past two years has grown from a membership of 450,000 to more than 600,000.

Supreme Court Of U.S. To Pass On Hughes' Plea

R. R. Jackson, prominent attorney, will leave Atlanta this afternoon for Washington, D. C., to argue in the supreme court the case of Mrs. Ida Hughes, who was convicted in Fulton superior court of murder and sentenced to serve life imprisonment.

Mrs. Hughes was convicted of the murder of her mother-in-law, Mrs. M. C. Hughes, in 1923. She was found guilty in Fulton superior court and was sentenced to be hanged. The state supreme court upheld the decision of the lower court. Governor Walker then changed the death penalty to life imprisonment.

Mr. Jackson will base his argument for a new trial before the United States supreme court on the grounds that the verdict was received in court after Judge G. H. Howard, who presided at the trial, had gone home for the night, that Solicitor General John A. Boykin, who prosecuted the case was not in court when the verdict was read, that counsel for Mrs. Hughes was not present when the verdict was returned, and that Mrs. Hughes was confined in the Fulton tower and was not present at the time.

There was no one present in court when the verdict was returned with the exception of Assistant Solicitor General Ed A. Stephens, a court bailiff and a Constitution reporter, Mr. Jackson alleges.

The constitution of Georgia and the United States guarantees to the accused the right to be present at all stages of the trial, to face each witness and poll each juror to ascertain whether the verdict returned by the foreman was the individual verdict of the jurors, Attorney Jackson declared.

Price Will Represent Georgia Commission In Hearing on Rates

E. M. Price, rate expert of the Georgia public service commission, leaves for Orlando, Fla., today to represent the Georgia commission at a hearing before the interstate commerce commission on vegetable freight rates out of Florida. The hearing followed a complaint filed by vegetable shippers of Florida and the Florida railroad commission asking for reduction of these rates to all points.

The Georgia commission, recognizing the rapid increase in the trucking industry in this state, feels that freight rates on vegetables from all parts of the southeast is a matter of vital importance to Georgia.

Makes Fat People Slim

New York Physician Perfects Harmless Method of Reducing Weight

The loss of as much as a pound of excess fat a day with no harmful results is the record made by many patients of Dr. R. Newman, a licensed practicing physician of 286 Fifth Avenue, New York, who announces that he has perfected a treatment which has quickly rid fat people of excess weight. What is more remarkable is the Doctor's statement that he has successfully treated thousands of patients for fat reduction without change of diet or unnecessary exercise. It is also said that fat people who suffer from chronic rheumatism, gout, asthma and high blood pressure obtain great relief from the reduction of their superfluous flesh. Realizing that this sounds almost too good to be true, the Doctor has offered to send without charge to anyone who will write him, a free trial treatment to prove his claims, as well as his "Pay-when-reduced" plan. If you want to rid yourself of superfluous fat, write him today, addressing Dr. R. Newman, 286 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Dept. R-1.—(adv.)

"Further Up"

A charming old lady (as young as any of us) met one of our executives recently, and the following morsel of conversation resulted:

"So you are with Davison-Paxon-Stokes Company. I have always liked that store. I bought my trousseau and wedding dress there—probably before you were born. I went there often in those days, because we lived further downtown near the store.

"About the time I was married, the Georgian Terrace corner, at Ponce de Leon avenue and Peachtree street, was the end of the horse car line, and very few people lived further up town. We have moved three times since then, and always further up town. Why have the stores never moved up town, as the residential district moved further up?"

There must always be a pioneer who risks much in taking the first step toward the removal of a business district to a new location. For the greater convenience of all our customers, and, particularly to these old families who have dealt with us so long and whose patronage we appreciate, the Davison-Paxon-Stokes store will soon be removed to the corner of Peachtree and Ellis streets, where a wonderful building is being erected—"further up!"

STUDENTS' CONFERENCE WILL CONCLUDE TODAY

The three-day meeting of the World Court Educational conference which began Friday evening at the First Baptist church, was continued with an address Saturday morning by Hon. Kirby Page, writer and lecturer of New York, on "The League of Nations and Its Relation to the World Court." On the program with Mr. Page were Mrs. Hamilton Douglas, of Atlanta, and Miss Marion Cuthbert, president of Burrell institute, who gave short talks.

Mr. Page lectured Saturday afternoon and again Saturday night on "Purposes of the World Court." After each lecture an open forum was held with brief addresses and discussions by various delegates.

On December 2 a vote of students from all the leading colleges of the south, for and against the world court, will be taken and submitted to congress just prior to its convening in December.

Mr. Page and J. W. Bergthold, traveling secretary of the Young Men's Christian association, will lecture this morning at 10 o'clock at the Central Young Men's Christian association, at which time another open forum will be held, which will conclude the conference.

Former Atlantan Dies.

News of the death several days ago of S. L. Harris, of Washington, D. C., former Atlantan, has been received here. Mr. Harris was a brother of Mrs. W. A. Calloway, of Atlanta, and W. A. Cloud, of Tuskegee, Ala.

BUISCH TO ADDRESS RETAIL MERCHANTS

Members of the Atlanta Retail Merchants' association are preparing for one of the most interesting meetings of the association on Thursday when L. H. Buisch, connected with the merchants' service department of the National Cash Register, will speak on the latest ideas on retail merchandising, particularly as it affects the marketing or sales end of the business.

Mr. Buisch's address has been delivered before a large number of retail merchants' associations throughout the country. Members of the local association two years ago heard W. H. Farley, from the same company.

This meeting completes a series of special educational meetings the association has been staging during 1925 for the benefit of its members, as no meeting will be held in December on account of the rush of Christmas trade.

Word was received recently from T. L. Stokes, president, who has been temporarily absent from the city in New York, that he expects to return to Atlanta the early part of January. During Mr. Stokes' absence from the city L. A. Witherspoon, first vice president, has been acting president.

EXTRADITION ASKED FOR WALKER MAN

Requisition papers were prepared Saturday at the office of Governor Clifford Walker for Raymond Blackwell, wanted in Walker county on a charge of robbery. Blackwell is now under arrest in Tennessee, it is said.

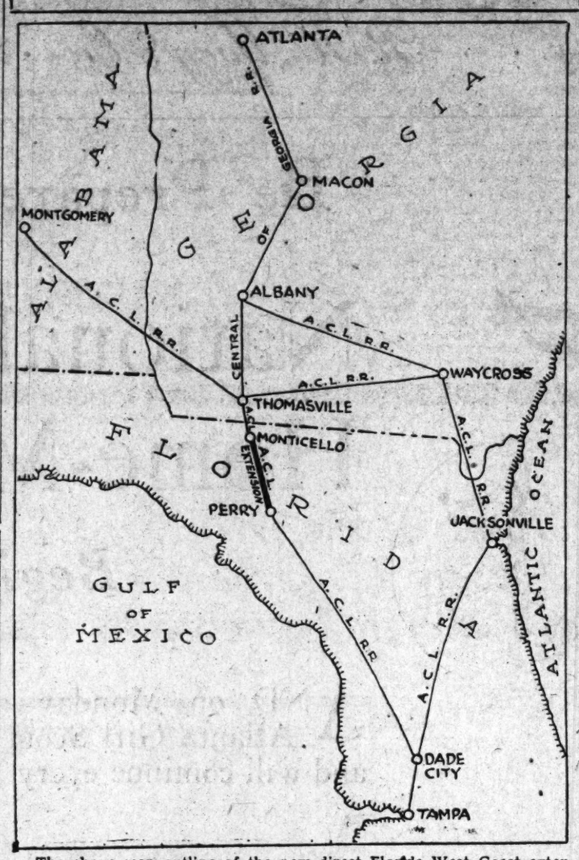

Blackwell is charged with forcibly taking $1,300 from W. E. McKeown, the money being the property of the LaFayette Cotton mills.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR C. F. NERI

Funeral services for C. F. Neri, 70, of 188 West Kimball street, who died Friday at the home, were held Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the chapel of Barclay & Brandon. The Rev. William J. Debardeleben and the Rev. H. M. Quillian officiated. Interment was in West View cemetery.

Mr. Neri had been in business in Atlanta for several years. He is survived by his widow, two sons, Garibaldi and Ward M. Neri, and two granddaughters, Miss Sarah Neri and Miss Emma Neal Neri.

New A. C. L. Florida West Coast Extension of Vast Service

The above map outline of the new direct Florida West Coast extension to be made by the Atlantic Coast Line railway shows the territory to be traversed and the connection it affords between Florida and the western section of the nation. Authority already has been asked for the undertaking.

The application of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad before the interstate commerce commission at Washington to authorize the extension of that line between Thomasville, Ga., and Monticello, Fla., will, it is taken for granted, be approved within the next few weeks. The distance is 41 miles and traverses a very attractive section of the state.

Authority to issue no additional bonds for the extension is asked for, as the work will be paid for out of treasury funds of the company, but approval of the interstate commerce commission for building the extension must be had before work proceeds.

A glance at the accompanying map will show what the building of this extension will mean in bringing the west coast of Florida closer to Atlanta and to the western part of the country.

The Atlantic Coast Line railroad already operates between Thomasville, Ga., and Monticello, Fla., and through Thomasville its main line runs from Montgomery to Waycross and Savannah.

Florida Operations.

The A. C. L. main line crosses Florida from Tampa to Jacksonville, where it connects with its main line to Waycross and Savannah.

The Atlantic Coast Line also owns and operates a line from Tampa to Perry, diverging from the main line at Dade City, Fla.

With the building of the connection between Monticello and Perry, a straight north and south line is opened from Tampa to Thomasville and Atlanta through the Atlantic Coast Line connection at Thomasville with the Central of Georgia railway.

At the present time the Atlantic Coast Line trains from the middle west to Florida are operated over the Central of Georgia to Albany, thence over the Atlantic Coast Line to Waycross and Jacksonville, thence back clear across the state to Tampa.

Routes for Traffic.

Traffic over this road from Birmingham, Memphis and the far west is carried through Montgomery to Thomasville and Waycross to Jacksonville, thence from coast to coast to Tampa.

The building of the Thomasville-Monticello connection will enable the Atlantic Coast Line to bring all of its middle and far western business straight down to the west coast of Florida without taking the circuitous route it now is forced to use.

It is said that the new extension will be completed by the next Florida season when direct connection will be made to Atlanta and the middle west, and through Montgomery to the far west for all business of the road, passenger and freight, to the west coast of Florida.

EDITOR OF MONITOR WILL ARRIVE FRIDAY

The executive committee of the Georgia supplement of the Christian Science Monitor announced Saturday that Willis J. Abbot, editor of the Monitor, will spend several days in Georgia, arriving in Atlanta today.

Mr. Abbot's reception throughout the state is expected to be most cordial. Leading men and women of Atlanta will bid him welcome. The chamber of commerce is entertaining him at luncheon Monday at noon, where a number of prominent Atlantans will meet him.

Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock the Writers club, Dr. W. F. Melton, president, will present Mr. Abbot to Atlanta in the Palm room of the Georgian Terrace. The reception committees, composed of Mrs. W. F. Melton, chairman; Mrs. Norman D. Sharpe, president Woman's club; Mrs. Edgar Neely, president Drama league; Mrs. Cliff Hatcher, president Music club; Mrs. R. K. Rambo, president Atlanta Federated Clubs; Mrs. V. P. Stevenson, vice president Woman's club; ex-Governor and Mrs. J. M. Slaton; Mrs. V. H. Kriegshaber; John Paschall, managing editor Atlanta Journal; Clark Howell and James Hollomon, of The Constitution; James B. Nevin, editor the Georgian; Harlee Branch, of the Journal; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Porter; Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Rainwater and others.

The public is invited to meet Mr. Abbot and hear his talk on journalism.

Monday night ex-Governor and Mrs. John M. Slaton will entertain 50 guests at a buffet-supper in honor of Mr. Abbot at their country home at Buckhead.

From Atlanta, Mr. Abbot will go to Macon, Brunswick and Savannah. The last-named city being the birthplace of his mother—Julia Holmes, who married Waldo Abbot, brother of the famous journalist, Dr. Lyman Abbot. The mother of Mr. Abbot was a distinguished physician and woman of letters, a clubwoman of note, for two years president of the Chicago Woman's club, a member of the U. D. C. and a lifelong democrat. She was active in civic, philanthropic and professional work throughout her life.

The Georgia supplement will be from the press November 21 and should reach Georgia Monday, November 23. It will be on sale throughout the state.

This evening at the close of the services at the First Church, Scientist, Fifteenth street and Peachtree, Atlanta, Mr. Abbot will talk about The Monitor, and the public is invited.

ST. MARK'S CLASS SEEK ATTENDANCE AWARD AGAIN TODAY

Members of the Men's Bible class of St. Mark's Methodist church have arranged a feature program for today's meeting and will make every effort to again win the attendance prize, J. A. Streyer, class president, said Saturday. The attendance prize was won by the class last Sunday.

A musical program will be given by the "Happy Four" quartet, directed by S. M. White. Judge H. Warner Hill, of the Georgia supreme court, is teacher.

U. S. LABOR OFFICIAL ON VISIT TO ATLANTA

Francis I. Jones, director general of the United States employment service, U. S. department of labor, arrived in Atlanta Friday, and will remain here over Tuesday. He is making an inspection of agencies cooperating with the government employment service and expressed himself as highly pleased with the community employment service, and was very complimentary of the management and results.

During the past year this office has placed in gainful occupations 5,938 workers, which is only a few less than were placed in 1924. In a talk before the Atlanta Safety council Friday he characterized the local office as one of the "best set up and most efficient in the United States."

Mr. Jones will preside at a meeting of state camber of commerce executives on Tuesday at the Ansley hotel, under auspices of Cator Woolford and Joseph P. McGrath, of the local body. The purpose of this meeting is to provide a closer relationship between employment bodies in the state and the federal director. Correspondence over a period of several months has demonstrated that a number of cities in Georgia need a central employment bureau, and Mr. Jones was urged to meet the representatives of the interested communities and is now here for that purpose.

Representatives from Atlanta, Macon, Augusta, Thomasville, Madison Brunswick, Bainbridge, Athens, Dublin, Rome, Americus and Valdosta have been invited and are expected to attend.

On leaving Atlanta, Mr. Jones will visit Birmingham, Little Rock, Texarkana, Fort Worth, Shreveport, Jacksonville and Miami before returning to Washington.

ATLANTA PHYSICIANS ATTEND MAYO CLINIC

Dr. C. E. Dowman and Dr. E. C. Thrash are visiting the Mayo Brothers in Rochester, N. Y. They also will spend some time in Chicago, Ill., returning to the city early next week. Many of Atlanta's leading physicians and surgeons are visiting this famous hospital and a group just recently returned to the city.

FORD MAKES 57 MILES ON GALLON OF GASOLINE

Pukwana, S. D.—J. A. Stransky of this city has invented a device which in actual test has increased the power and mileage of automobiles from 25 to 40 per cent and removes carbon from the cylinders. With it attached automobiles have made from 35 to 57 miles on a gallon of gasoline. Another remarkable feature of this simple and amazing device is that its action is governed entirely by the motor, making it automatic. It can be installed by anyone in five minutes. Mr. Stransky wants distributors and is willing to send a sample at his risk. Send your name and address to J. A. Stransky, L-534 Stransky Bldg., Pukwana, S. D., today.—(adv)

of success essential to the development and prosperity of commercial and industrial enterprises of stable character are found in Lakeland, in the heart of Florida's most richly cultivated county.

While Lakeland's future prosperity is assured, its growth has really but begun. Real estate values have more than trebled in five years, and as the city grows will continue to accumulate profits for early investors.

Lakeland offers unusual opportunity for substantial returns on sound investment, for its realty values have never been speculatively discounted. Investment today means assured returns.

LOVE AFFAIR FIGURES IN WASHINGTON TRIAL

Washington, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The case of Robert Boatwright, 25, charged with the murder of Barney Lunceford, 28, early in September at Rayle, Ga., in the western section of Wilkes county where both families are prominently connected, will be called for trial in Walkes superior court Tuesday morning, November 9. Civil business has occupied the attention during the present week and the criminal docket, according to the announcement of Judge C. J. Perryman, will consume the greater part of next week.

Love Affair Involved.

Circumstances surrounding the fatal shooting which brought to a tragic end a prom party at the home of Joe L. Lunceford in honor of the college boys and girls of the Rayle neighborhood, the prominence of the families involved and the fact that the interference with a love affair between Robert Boatwright and a young sister of the dead man is the alleged cause of the difficulty resulting in the fatal shooting—all conspire to make the approaching trial one of broad interest.

Since the morning after the deplorable affair, Robert Boatwright has been confined in jail at Winder, Ga., pending his trial on a murder charge at the present term of court. A warrant charging murder was sworn out soon after the tragedy. Sheriff George M. Walton who took his prisoner to Winder, stated at the time that he did so out of consideration for the feelings of his deputy sheriff, G. H. Lunceford, a brother of the slain man, who has usual charge of the inmates of the local jail.

It was Deputy G. H. Lunceford who arrested Robert Boatwright on the night of the shooting, brought him to Washington and turned his prisoner over to Sheriff Walton before rushing to the local hospital to be with his dying brother.

There was only one eye-witness to the shooting—the young sister of Barney Lunceford, who was sitting in an automobile with Robert Boatwright in front of the home where the party gaieties were in progress, when Barney Lunceford approached the car and called for his sister to come into the house. Miss Lunceford has steadfastly refused to make any statement whatever, up to this time, bearing on any phase of the tragedy.

Counsel Employed.

Judge B. F. Walker, of Wrens, Ga., formerly on the bench of Toombs circuit, and Judge Clement E. Sutton, of the city court of Washington, have been engaged for the defense. Solicitor M. L. Felts, of Warrenton, and Erle Norman, of Washington, are prosecuting counsel.

Atlanta To Be Host To 750 Ticket Agents At Breakfast Monday

Stone Mountain will be visited Monday by 750 members of the American Association of Railway Ticket Agents when they stop over in Atlanta on their way to the annual convention of the association in St. Petersburg, Fla. The visitors will be presented with an engraved block of Stone Mountain granite for use as a gavel pounding block.

Arriving at 7 o'clock Monday morning the agents will be guests of the Atlanta Convention and Tourist bureau at breakfast at the Ansley and Biltmore hotels and Ruse & Cason's cafe, the party being divided into three sections because of its size. Following the Stone Mountain visit, the agents will board their train at 11 o'clock for Florida.

The club has taken great interest in the county fair to open here next week, through this source more than $2,000 being raised for the fair.

Stony Point Group Offers Unique Musical Program

Made possible by the public-spirited generosity of a group of leading Atlantans, this city is to be given the opportunity on November 26 of enjoying a beautiful and unique entertainment.

This event is the coming to the auditorium of the Stony Point Ensemble, which presents a chorus of 50 selected voices in what is described as a "vocal symphony orchestra" and brings a list of dancing and instrumental singing stars, including such famous people as Maud Allan, Clara Brookhurst and Benno Rabinoff. It will show Atlanta for the first time the sensational clavilux, an organ of color which throws ever-changing color pictures on the back drop of the stage, making marvelous scenery which melts from one picture into another as the mood of the music and of the performer changes.

Eleven members of the Atlanta Music Festival association, which brings the Metropolitan Opera company to Atlanta every year, have furnished the guarantee necessary to bring the Stony Point Ensemble here. They are H. M. Atkinson, C. B. Bidwell, Charles Howard Candler, Dudley R. Cowles, Benjamin Elsas, Mrs. DeLos L. Hill, Mrs. Samuel M. Inman, Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, Robert S. Parker, J. Carroll Payne and Colonel W. L. Peel. C. B. Bidwell is general manager in charge of the entertainment.

Vocal Symphony.

The entire accompaniment for the various numbers on the program to be given November 26 is furnished by the chorus, or vocal symphony orchestra, no other orchestra being carried. The work of these singers is said to be astounding in its beauty of effect. They will also sing a large group of folk songs and will give two orchestra selections as accompaniments for the dances by Maud Allan, Chopin's "March Funebre" and the "Salome" dance.

Thomas Wilfred is the inventor of clavilux. This instrument, in appearance, is like the keyboard of a pipe organ, but instead of playing music, the operator manipulates keys which work electric lighting effects, floods, spots, dimmers, etc. The back of the stage is covered with a blank canvas and on this the clavilux throws pictures of light, one scene dissolving into another in an ever changing panorama of loveliness which perfectly fits the mood of the performance.

Famous Dancer.

In addition to Maud Allan, another famous American dancer will appear in the person of Cecile D'Andrea, said to be the greatest exponent of the classic dance ever trained on this side of the Atlantic.

Benno Rabinoff is a violinist who was the favorite pupil of Leopold Auer. Clara Brookhurst is one of the most famous contraltos on the American concert stage. Oda Tallys and Jeanne Palmer, sopranos, are also on the program.

The conductor who will lead the Atlanta concert is Professor Alexander Koshetz, and the assistant conductor is Gregory Tuchapsky. Professor Koshetz was conductor and creative genius of the world-famous Ukranian national chorus.

MRS. BERGSTROM DIES IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Martha W. Bergstrom, of 184 Highland view, well-known Atlantan, died at a private hospital Saturday after an extended illness. She was the daughter of Nathaniel Newton Mangum and Polly Connally Mangum, who were pioneers of this section.

Mrs. Bergstrom, who was 77, at the time of her death was the oldest living member of Trinity Methodist church and took an active part in church affairs for more than 50 years.

She was the sister of ex-Sheriff C. W. Mangum and a cousin of ex-Sheriff J. J. Barnes. Mrs. Bergstrom was married in 1870 to Andrey M. Bergstrom, who died 21 years ago. He was in the printing busines in Atlanta for many years and at one time operated a candy factory.

Mrs. Bergstrom is survived by five sons, Oscar M., Andrew M., Calvin N., and Carl T. Bergstrom, all of Atlanta, and Earnest L. Bergstrom, of Macon; a daughter-in-law, Mrs. S. T. Bergstrom; and five grandchildren, Miss Martha Bergstrom, Miss Olive Mildred Bergstrom, and Jack, Oscar M., Jr., and Andrew Bergstrom.

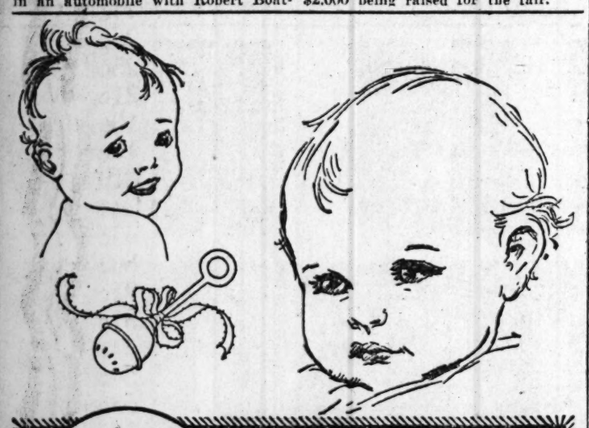

Funeral services will be held at 3:30 o'clock, this afternoon from Trinity Methodist church. The Rev. Wallace Rogers will officiate. Interment will be in Oakland cemetery in charge of H. M. Patterson & Son.

SENATOR HARRIS INVITES COOLIDGE TO VIST AUGUSTA

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Another invitation to visit the south was extended to President Coolidge today by Senator Harris, of Georgia, who urged him to pay Augusta a visit during the winter. As spokesman for the chamber of commerce, the senator said a royal welcome awaited the president in the city which President Taft frequently visited, and which also was host to President Harding.

President Coolidge replied that while he would like to make a trip south during the winter, he doubted whether he would be able to get away from Washington on account of the press of public business.

JOURNALISM CLASS AT EMORY RESULTS IN NEW PAPER

Emory University, Ga., November 7. (Special.)—Instruction received in the journalism class conducted at Emory university by Dr. W. F. Melton has borne fruit in the establishment of the Crystal River Mirror at Crystal River, Fla., by John Kilgore, a member of the class of 1917 and who will be editor and publisher of the newspaper.

It has been learned here that Mr. Kilgore is building a Spanish stucco plant for his publication which will have arched openings with colorful tile and awnings. The plant will be linotype-equipped and will have modern presses and new type faces.

Before establishing the plant at Crystal River Mr. Kilgore was connected with The Savannah Press as sporting editor and with numerous other newspapers in the southern states. Recently he was managing editor of the Tri-City Morning News at Bradenton, Fla.

ASHEVILLE TROOPS AGAIN CALLED OUT AS NEGRO IS FREED

Asheville, N. C., November 7.—(AP) Two hours after a Buncombe county superior court jury had found Preston Neely, negro, not guilty of a charge of criminally attacking a West Asheville white woman, and after troops who had been guarding him during the trial were dismissed, the militia was again ordered to report to the armory. This action was caused when officials expressed the fear that there may be race trouble here tonight. The troops are being held in readiness and it was said would be placed on the streets with report of any impending clash.

ACQUITTED NEGRO RUSHED ACROSS LINE FOR SAFETY.

Hendersonville, N. C., November 7. Will your Skin bear close inspection?

EVERYBODY admires an unblemished skin—a skin of natural clearness, tinted with the pink glow of health!

A woman's skin will add to or mar her beauty. It is her greatest charm. And a man's skin is his certificate of merit.

How is your skin? Will it bear close inspection? Or, are you embarrassed when anyone is near you, because of your muddy, sallow complexion, pimples, blackheads, blotches, rashes, boils or eczema?

S. S. S. will give you the clear, healthy skin that everybody admires. You know that rich, red blood is absolutely necessary to a beautiful, unblemished skin.

It's a fact! There never was anything more certain. And S. S. S. helps Nature build this rich, red blood—it builds red-blood-cells by the millions! S. S. S. will give you a skin that you'll be proud for people to see.

Build rich, red blood with S. S. S. That's the thing to do. And just watch blemishes disappear and the sleeping beauty of your skin come out for the world to admire. Beautify your skin by feeding it with the rich, red blood that S. S. S. helps Nature build.

S. S. S. will give you strength and energy, too. That comes from red blood. It will drive out rheumatism, increase your appetite, put firm, plump flesh on your body.

Get S. S. S. at your druggist. The larger bottle is more economical.

One of the Many Good Roads Through Jacksonville Heights

For the benefit of those who have not found it convenient to visit our properties—(Jacksonville Heights, near the City of Jacksonville)—we are reproducing above a road scene—one of the many good roads running through and leading out into the state.

Other good roads are traversing the property and more will be built in future.

Jacksonville Heights 10-Acre Tracts

TAKEN FROM
One of Roger Babson's Reports on Florida:

—"buying the best acreage accessible to modern improvements, subdividing the same, and then building attractive three or four-room houses where an old couple can go for the winter."

"In this there is a real chance for service, because by getting such people to Florida for the winter their lives may be lengthened five to ten years."

Important!

While Mr. Babson does not mention Jacksonville Heights in his statement—he has no interest whatever in it or with us—he has almost exactly described what we have to offer in our ten-acre tracts near Jacksonville.

We are close enough to the city to be accessible as time goes on to every city convenience; we are directly in the path of the city's choicest residential development, through Riverside and Avondale, and as the city grows it is a safe prediction that it will grow in this direction, and Jacksonville is growing rapidly in a substantial way.

CONSTRUCTION FIRM TAX PLAN ENJOINED

An order permanently enjoining W. S. Richardson, county tax collector and John M. Vandiver, state commissioner of revenue, from collecting a tax of one-half of one per cent on contract price of construction companies for work on roads, buildings and ther public work was signed Saturday by Judge E. D. Thomas, in Fulton superior court.

The judge's order also declared unconstitutional paragraph 42 and 43 of the general tax act of 1918 and paragraphs 14 and 15 of the act of 1919.

Fifteen construction companies in a suit filed agaist Mr. Richardson and Mr. Vandiver asked for the injunction on the grounds that the tax imposed on them is not uniform and is unconstitutional since the same act is not imposed on contractors engaged in projects classed as private construction.

AGED CATHOLIC PRIEST IS VICTIM OF DEATH

Louisville, Ky., November 7.—(AP)—Bishop Dennis O'Donaghue, who resigned from the Louisville diocese in August, 1924, after half a century in the Catholic priesthood, died at his home here at 2:10 this morning. He held the titular rank of bishop of Lebedus at the time of his death, which had been expected for some days.

Almost 77 years old, Bishop O'Donaghue was born November 30, 1848, on a farm near Washington, seat of Daviess county, Indiana. His father, James O'Donaghue, and his mother, formerly Mary Twomey, were born in the southern part of Ireland, and the farm on which their son Dennis was born was a land grant from the then new state of Indiana.

When only 14 year old young Dennis O'Donaghue determined to forsake the law for which he had been intended and devote himself to service in the creed to which he had been brought up. He left home and entered St. Meinrad's Benedictine abbey in Spencer county, Indiana, after which he attended St. Thomas' seminary at Bardstown and was ordained a priest September 6, 1874.

The first assignment of the young priest was to the assistant pastorship of St. John's church, Indianapolis, four years later being made pastor of St. Patrick's there. He was permanent rector there from 1887 until 1910, when he came to Louisville. He was chancellor of the diocese of Indianapolis under the late Bishop Francis Silas Chatard for 21 years and became its vicar general on March 18, 1899, continuing actively his pastoral duties in addition.

On account of the failing health of Bishop Chatard, the holy see named Father O'Donaghue titular bishop of Pomario and auxiliary bishop of Indianapolis on February 13, 1900. In 1910 he was enthroned bishop of Louisville. In June, 1923, Bishop John A. Floersh was appointed his coadjutor with the right of succession.

One sister in the Benedictine order at New Orleans, Sister Boniface, survives. Funeral arrangements had not been announced early today.

Screen Comedian Brolund Arrives for Local Comedy

Slim Brolund, lanky funny man of the movies, is in Atlanta to take part in the screening of the two-reel comedy sponsored by The Constitution. With the leading lady contest over, all but counting the votes, the name of the winner who will play opposite "Slim" will be announced within the coming few days.

With The Constitution's contest for selection of a leading young woman to play opposite the famous screen comedian, "Slim" Brolund, in an Atlanta-made two-reel moving picture comedy, ended, the work of counting votes is going forward as rapidly as possible. The name of the winner will be announced just as soon as the counting has been completed and properly checked.

There were many entrants in this contest, not only from Atlanta but from all parts of Georgia, and votes came in in astonishing numbers right up to the close of the contest at midnight Saturday.

The picture to be made here is to be called "An Atlanta Romance." The scenario is about finished, Mr. Brolund announces, and as soon as it is completed the outline in continuity form just as is used in the making of the picture, will be published in The Constitution.

Mr. Brolund states that the name of the picture was inspired by the wonderful growth of Atlanta, which, he declares, has been a real romance of progress. Inasmuch as the story also concerns a love romance; that all the scenes are laid in Atlanta, and nearly all the characters are Atlanta people, the title is considered especially appropriate. It is stated that practically every point of interest about the city is woven into the film story.

Full equiment for taking the picture will be in Atlanta next week and with advance men hard at work selecting locations actual work on taking the picture will begin soon.

The film will be shown at the Howard theater for a full week.

$150,000 SOUGHT IN 3 DAMAGE SUITS

Three damage suits aggregating $150,000 were filed Saturday in Fulton superior court. Two suits against the Atlanta and West Point railroad were filed by Mrs. Ophelia West and her daughter, Dovie West, 10, while the third was filed by Cecil Lacy against the Georgia Railway and Power company.

Mrs. West brings suit for damages for the death of her husband, John Henry West, who she alleges was killed on September 16 due to the negligence of the railroad at Washington street grade crossing in East Point. He is alleged to have been crossing the tracks of the company when struck by a southbound passenger train and killed instantly.

Dovie West asked $10,000 damages for injuries alleged to have been received in the accident that resulted in the death of her father. She was an occupant of the truck at the time of the crash and sets out that she was bruised about the head and body. The two suits were filed by Attorneys Reuben R. and Lowry Arnold and H. A. Allen.

Cecil Lacy, a soldier at Fort McPherson, asked $100,000 damages from the power company for injuries alleged to have been received on August 15 when he was crushed beneath a street car, the property of the defendant company, at Oak stop, a short distance north of Fort McPherson.

NORMAL TRAINING LEADS ATTENDANCE

Atlanta Normal Training school led city schools in high percentage of attendance during the week, according to announcement made Saturday by the city department of education.

Five leading schools were Atlanta Normal Training school, 98.2 per cent; State Street school, 98; Pryor Street school, 97.6; William A. Bass, 97.4, and Peeples Street school, 97 per cent.

Women To Handle Sale of Poppies On Armistice Day

All preparations have been completed for sale of thousands of poppies on the streets of Atlanta on Armistice day, it was announced Saturday by Mrs. Asa Warren Candler, general chairman of the committee of the American Legion in charge of the poppy sale.

The red poppy of Flanders, reminiscent of the American boys who gave their lives in the great war, again has been selected by the legion to commemorate the spirit of Armistice day in 1918, when a great wave of thankfulness swept the nation on learning of the victorious close of the long struggle.

As in former years proceeds of the sale will go to the service fund of Argonne post to be used in behalf of ex-soldiers who are in actual need. None of the money collected will be used to defray expenses of the sale, several hundred patriotic Atlanta women having volunteered to give their services for the occasion.

The Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs has joined hands with the Legion and the legion auxiliary to make the sale a success. Mrs. Arthur H. Hazzard is chairman of the federation's committee.

Each poppy will bear the inscription, "Buy Me—Wear Me," and "I stand for service. All you pay for me goes 100 per cent for those for whom the war is not yet over. I represent the sacrificial blood of the men who fell in Flanders Field. I am a memorial to all who died in service. In reverence and understanding wear me."

It was stated that there have been many calls this year for aid on the part of the local post of the Legion and splendid work has been done in behalf of the disabled and other unfortunate "buddies" of Atlanta ex-service men. The post maintains a service office at 224 Palmer building which is supported by Atlanta members of the Legion.

MILK LAW COMPLIANCE PLEDGED BY DAIRYMEN

The new "certified" milk law which goes into effect in February will have the support of the Georgia Pure Milk association, composed of dairymen who serve the Atlanta district, according to a letter Saturday from J. W. Keene to Mayor Walter A. Sims.

Mr. Keene told the mayor that members of the association had spent large sums in improving dairies so that they can comply with provisions of the new law.

H. D. Lucas, of the city department of health, an expert on milk production, is working on the new ordinance which will become effective in February. It is designed to throw all possible safeguards around production of milk in Atlanta dairies and the dairymen have assured Mr. Lucas that they wil cooperate with him in enforcement of the law.

M'LENDON URGES FORMATION HERE OF CREDIT UNIONS

Secretary of State S. Guyt McLendon stated Friday that in his opinion creation of credit unions in Georgia, under the law permitting such organizations passed by the last legislature, was one of the most desirable developments for the state as a whole.

"These credit unions," he said, "are practically the same thing as the building and loan societies. They are organizations among groups of people for the encouragement of thrift and the results, wherever they have been established, have been excellent. There ought to be 500 credit unions or building and loan societies in Atlanta alone."

A charter was recently issued to the first credit union established under the new law. Members of this union are employees of the Atlanta postoffice. It is understood that federal civil service employees in Savannah are forming a similar organization and that one is also in process of formation in Mamon.

'Armistice Sunday' Will Be Observed By Mass Meeting

Armistice Sunday, November 8, be observed in Atlanta by a mass meeting at 3 o'clock this afternoon in Central Presbyterian church, under auspices of the Christian council.

The program includes two minutes' silence in memory of those who made the supreme sacrifice in the world war. This feature of the program will be introduced by a bugle sounding "The Roll Call."

Robert C. Alston will preside and speakers are Eugene R. Black and Dr. M. Ashby Jones.

Similar meetings will be held on this day throughout the country, according to members of the Christian council.

Chronic Fatigue Keeps Many Mothers Always "Dead Tired"

THOUSANDS of pale, weary, worn-out mothers are victims of chronic fatigue—and do not know it.

If you are always weak, tired, nervous and ailing—if your housework leaves you exhausted and the children seem to be continually getting on your nerves, if you are subject to frequent backache, dizzy spells, palpitation, etc.—nine chances out of ten the real, underlying cause is chronic fatigue.

Don't confuse chronic fatigue with the ordinary "healthy" fatigue you feel after a good long walk in the open air. Chronic fatigue—the serious kind—comes from within. Your organs and muscles have become debilitated and cannot function properly. This condition if not corrected may lead to far worse.

To conquer chronic fatigue you must go to the real root of the trouble—in the blood. For it is the blood that carries nourishment to every nerve, muscle and tissue of your body. And it is almost invariably when your blood is thin and pale, lacking in sufficient strength-giving organic iron, that you become all run-down and are a victim of chronic fatigue.

In this condition what you need is to strengthen your entire system by restoring this organic iron to your blood. But don't take the old-fashioned mineral iron medicines which many doctors say do little good. Take organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which is like the iron in your blood and like that in spinach and lentils. Unlike ordinary mineral iron medicines, it will not injure the teeth or disturb the stomach. Furthermore, being like the iron in your blood it is promptly assimilated and begins at once to strengthen debilitated organs and muscles and give you new strength and endurance.

Take Nuxated Iron for just 2 weeks and you'll be astonished how that terrible weak, tired feeling simply vanishes, how much stronger and better you feel, and how the color comes back to your cheeks and the bright sparkle and life to your eyes. Money back if not improved. At all good druggists.—(adv.)

Rites For Mrs. Willis Are Held Near Macon; Member Pioneer Family

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The funeral of Mrs. Anna Walden Willis, 75, was held this afternoon at Liberty church, near her home in the Walden community. Mrs. Willis was one of the most prominent women of that section of the county. Her father was one of the builders of the Southwestern railroad, now a division of the Central of Georgia railway.

Mrs. Willis is survived by her husband, Jere B. Willis, whom she married 56 years ago, and the following children: John J. Willis, of Macon; Mrs. Ida Taylor, Mrs. Ned Feagin, Mrs. Homer Calhoun and Mrs. Robert J. Johnston, all of Walden, and one sister, Mrs. W. B. Dasher, of Ashburn.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. E. B. Sutton, pastor of Liberty M. E. church, and Rev. W. F. Smith, presiding elder.

Chandler's Boot Shop Will Celebrate Third Anniversary Monday

Monday morning marks the third anniversary of Candler's Boot Shop in Atlanta. Opening three years ago with a model shop for displaying and selling ladies' shoes, Chandler's met with such approval that the firm felt justified shortly in opening another Chandler's store in a nearby city. Hopes were fulfilled and from the encouragement offered by this auspicious beginning it was decided to open a chain of Chandler stores in southern cities.

Today there are seven Chandler stores in operation with 75 salesmen, five managers and one sales manager selling shoes to southern women.

C. E. Hadaway, sales manager, who opened the first store in Atlanta, has been selling shoes to Atlanta women for more than 12 years and most salesmen now employed have been given an intensive course of training under him.

The average daily sales of Chandler's first store in Atlanta totaled 300 pairs. This daily output has been increased to the point that sales now average above 1,500 pairs of shoes each day, attesting to the popularity of Chandler's "one-price only policy."

Mr. Hadaway states that a token of appreciation will be given to each of their friends and customers who visit the store Monday and that an extra effort will be made to show Atlanta women how grateful the company is for the patronage Chandler's has enjoyed.

Snook and White Attending National Prison Meeting

Luther White, superintendent of federal prisons of the United States, and John W. Snook, warden of the Atlanta federal penitentiary, left Atlanta Friday night for Jackson, Miss., to attend the national prison conference there.

Mr. White inspected the local institution Friday and was high in his praise of Mr. Snook's administration. He is expected to return to Washington directly from Jackson but will return to Atlanta the latter part of December to attend a meeting of the parole board of the local institution.

WATSON MEMORIAL CAMPAIGN ACTIVE

Speakers will be placed in the field this week in behalf of the campaign to raise $104,000 for a memorial to the late United States Senator Thomas E. Watson, to be erected on the state capitol grounds, according to announcement by James H. Boykin, president of the memorial association.

Friends of the late Senator Watson in Fulton county will organize a committee to obtain the county's quota. The city of Augusta recently appropriated $250 to the monument fund and other cities are expected to contribute, according to reports to Mr. Boykin.

BUTLER STREET 'Y' HOLDS 'PRAYER WEEK'

The annual week of prayer will be observed at the Butler Street Y. M. C. A. November 8-14, under auspices of the junior committee of management. C. E. Protho, of the religious work committee, will be in charge of the initial meeting this afternoon at 4 o'clock, at which time "God and Man" will be the subject for discussion.

Hair Secrets

Gleamy, Thick, Wavy Hair in a Moment

A delightful surprise awaits those who try this. When combing and dressing your hair, just moisten your hair brush with a little "Danderine" and brush it through your hair. The effect is startling! Your hair will appear twice as thick and heavy—sparkling with life and possessing that incomparable softness, freshness and luxuriance and just delicately perfumed.

While beautifying the hair "Danderine" is also toning and stimulating each single hair to grow thick, heavy and strong. Hair stops falling out and dandruff disappears. Get a 35-cent bottle of "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter and just see how healthy and youthful your hair appears after this delightful, refreshing dressing.—(adv.)

Two Sisters Meet Accidental Death By Asphyxiation

Accidental Escape of Monoxide Gas Blamed By Coroner's Jury for Death of Two Teachers.

BODIES ARE FOUND ON BATHROOM FLOOR

Believed Miss Annie and Miss Margaret Greene Were Overcome While Preparing for Bath.

"Accidental asphyxiation from carbon monoxide gas" was the verdict Saturday afternoon of a coroner's jury in an inquest over the bodies of Miss Annie Greene, 24, English teacher in Hoke Smith Junior High school, and her sister, Miss Margaret Greene, 20, music teacher at Roswell High school, who were found dead early Saturday morning in the bathroom at their home, 311 Grant street.

Last seen alive Friday night when they retired to their rooms, the lifeless bodies of the sisters were discovered early Saturday on the bathroom floor when Mrs. E. H. Hutcheson and Mattie Dawson, negro maid, smelled gas fumes and forced the bathroom door. Mrs. Hutcheson and the maid found the gas water heater still turned on.

Bodies Are Discovered.

At the coroner's inquest, Mrs. Hutchens, J. A. Baugh and Mrs. Josephine Breedlove, all of 311 Grant street, testified to forcing the door and discovering the bodies Saturday morning when they smelled gas fumes.

One of the witnesses stated that from the position of the bodies it was indicated that one of the sisters first had been overcome and that the other had rushed to her assistance but had herself fallen before being able to reach the locked door and escape from the room.

It was believed the young women had been preparing to bathe and had turned on the water heater when escaping fumes caused them to lose consciousness. Water in the tub was still warm when the door was forced Saturday morning.

Just previous to the death of the sisters, five women employees of a local candy company at 158 Means street, were overcome Friday night by what physicians believe was illuminating gas. Saturday they were reported recovering.

Came From Roswell.

Miss Margaret Greene came to Atlanta Friday night from Roswell to study at the Atlanta Conservatory of Music, as was her custom. Her sister, a graduate of Wesleyan Female college, attended choir practice Friday night, and then, joined by Miss Margaret Greene, retired for the night.

They were both members of the Inman Park Methodist church Sunday school class, taught by Mrs. H. B. Mays, wife of the pastor.

They are survived by their parents, Rev. and Mrs. Bryan Greene, of Curryville, and a brother, Bryan Greene, Jr., who is a teacher at Sparks college.

CHEST WORKERS READY FOR SIGNAL TO LAUNCH DRIVE

Annual Campaign Gets Under Way Monday for Quota of $666,000 To Cover 1926 Activities.

With the slogan, "Atlanta Never Fails," as the keynote of activities the campaign for the Community Chest fund of $666,000 for charitable and philanthropic work in Atlanta during 1926, will be formally launched Monday, November 9. Those directing the drive hope to reach their goal by Thanksgiving day.

Only 34 social agencies are included in the chest for next year as compared to 39 which received chest funds during the present year. Through the work of the chest budget committee three institutions were dropped from participation in the chest and two others were combined with others. This enabled the committee to place the campaign goal $148,000 less than was asked last year, leaders pointed out.

Preliminary work for the campaign was cleaned up the past week in a score of committee and group meetings, with the result that solicitation of funds will be started Monday. To pave the way for solicitation all pastors of the city have been requested to present the facts of the Community Chest campaign to congregations today, with a message urging every man, woman and child to contribute to the fund.

Campaign Divided.

Under the leadership of J. M. B. Hoxsey, vice president of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph company, as general chairman, the campaign this year has been divided into three stages, in the hope that it will function more advantageously than in the past.

Starting Monday the first week will be devoted largely to the work of the special or "big money" committee, which will go after the big givers; the groups committee, which will solicit subscriptions from about 75 of the leading industries and corporations of the city; and the foreign corporations committee, which will raise funds from foreign concerns which maintain territory headquarters in Atlanta.

Activities of the second week of the drive will be centered in the neighborhood campaign. This provides for division of the city into regions, each to consist of three or more wards or districts. Each ward then will be subdivided into sections and a sufficient number of workers will be named to insure that every man, woman and child in the city will be given an opportunity to do his share for the poor and needy, the sick and helpless and the under-privileged people in Atlanta.

Post Drive Plans.

If the drive has not gone "over the top" before Thanksgiving day, another phase of the campaign will be launched at that time. It will be under the direction of the intensive committee whose job it will be to see all prospects not covered by the special, groups, foreign corporations and neighborhood committees.

In addition to the divisions the colored people of the city also have been organized, with Rev. P. J. Bryant, pastor of Wheat Street Baptist church, as chairman; Professor W. A. Hill, director and B. J. Davis, chairman of "big gifts" committee. During the present year eight colored agencies received a total of over $30,800 from the chest. In the last campaign the colored group subscribed more than $17,000.

"We feel that the stage is set for the success of the 1925 campaign for $666,000 for the Community Chest," Mr. Hoxsey stated Saturday. "All the committees for the first week of the drive have been well organized. There has been an enthusiastic and ready response on the part of the men who

Convicts Turn Fire-Fighters As Camp Burns

Camp in Baldwin County Destroyed by Fire—Prisoners and Animals Saved.

Milledgeville, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Twenty convicts were quickly formed into a fire-fighting force here last night, when their quarters at the Baldwin county convict camp caught fire and burned every building except the superintendent's home. The fire originated in the barn.

None of the prisoners were hurt and none escaped. All the animals except one mule were saved. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

The board of county commissioners, composed of O. M. Ennis, O. F. Moran and G. C. McKinley will meet Monday in special session. It is announced, however, that work of rebuilding the camp will begin at once.

U. S. MISSIONS AND SCHOOLS IN SYRIA BURNED

Preparations Made To Evacuate on Short Notice 10,000 Children Under Near East Relief.

BRIAND TO PROMISE WIDEST AUTONOMY

Damascus Living in Dread of Attack by Rebel Forces Which Surround Ancient City.

New York, November 7.—(AP)—Concern for orphans under his care and for missionaries connected with American mission schools and churches, which are reported to have been burned in the region south of Damascus, in Syria, has led Charles R. Fowle, of Bethlehem, Pa., director in Syria of the Near East relief, to head an expedition from Beirut into the territory affected by the uprising of the Druses.

This was learned today at the national headquarters of the Near East relief.

Accompanying Mr. Fowle is Bayard Dodge, president of the American university at Beirut, and son of Cleveland H. Dodge, treasurer of the Near East relief.

Learned From British.

Information regarding the destruction of American churches and missions came through Roy M. Davidson, of Ashland, Ky., who is in charge of the Near East relief work in Palestine. He said the British have barred Palestine to refugees from Syria, many of whom are massed on the Palestine border. It was from them that information of the destruction of American property was gathered.

It now is estimated that about 20,000 Christians in the Damascus district have been affected. Among them were 300 children from the Near East Relief orphanages, who had been placed in homes under the supervision of Miss Helen Lund, of New York, stationed at Damascus.

Prepare To Evacuate.

Preparations have been made to evacuate the 10,000 children in Near East Relief orphanages in Syria upon short notice, if the situation demands such action. It was said, however, that the situation had not reached a point at which this was considered likely.

Considerable concern is felt for the 2,000 Christian orphans in the Aleppo district to the north of Damascus, placed in homes under the supervision of the relief agency. This is a mountainous district where many of the nomandic Arab tribesmen are reported to have broken out into banditry. Efforts to ascertain the conditions of

AD FUND HANDLED BY LOCAL AGENCY

Eastman-Scott Firm Will Direct Expenditure of $250,000 Under Supervision of Committee.

Atlanta's broad advertising campaign in which more than $250,000 will be employed to broadcast this city's advantages to every corner of the nation soon will be under full speed ahead, according to Ivan E. Allan, general chairman of the forward Atlanta advertising commission.

Mr. Allen's statement came with his announcement that Eastman, Scott and company, well-known local advertising agency, had been chosen to direct the campaign.

This organization now is at work on detailed plans of the campaign which will be announced within the near future. While the definite program is not yet available it is known that only publication of a national scope will be used, so as to secure a thorough and authoritative coverage of the United States in telling Atlanta's story.

Supervisory Committee.

This campaign is the largest ever to be undertaken by any single city in a campaign of national proportions and will be generally supervised by a committee of representative Atlantans as follows:

Ivan E. Allen, chairman, William Candler, Frank Adair, J. K. Ottley, Frank Neely, A. J. Orme, Louis Marquard, Virlyn Moore, Milton Bell, L. T. Y. Nash and W. R. C. Smith, president of the Atlanta chamber of commerce, ex-officio. Philip Alston is general counsel for the committee, and Harry Johnson is treasurer.

E. Gerry Eastman is president of Eastman, Scott and company, and Myra C. Scott is vice president; James E. Winn is secretary-treasurer. These are well known in Atlanta for their connection with many advertising successes in the south and have had extensive experience both in the south and in the east.

The firm was organized six years

Put More Pressure On Local Officers, Dry League Urged

PURE FOOD SHOW OPENS FOR FIFTH YEAR ON MONDAY

Educational Features of Food Products Will Be Emphasized in Array of Food Products.

The doors of the auditorium-armory will open Monday on the fifth annual food show of the Atlanta Retail Food Dealers' association with an array of exhibits and demonstrations never equaled before in the south, according to R. V. Bergen, secretary-manager.

Many special features will make this year's show more attractive to the public and arrangements have been made to entertain at least a hundred thousand people, he says. A public wedding on Tuesday night will be one of the big features of entertainment expected to draw one of the auditorium-armory's biggest crowds.

A particularly attractive exhibit will be that sponsored by the Altanta "better homes" committee under direction of Mrs. Edward H. Smith and Mrs. Newton C. Wing. The exhibit consists of a completely furnished kitchen, dining room, sitting room and bedroom, and will occupy the entire rear section of the stage. Furniture and furnishings for this exhibit will be supplied by the Haverty Furniture company.

The "better homes" exhibit will be used by the home economics classes of the five Atlanta high schools under general chairmanship of Miss Clara Lee Cone, home economic expert of the school department.

Pupils Will Attend.

On Monday pupils of the Joseph Brown High school will demonstrate the making of salads; on Tuesday the Hoke Smith Junior High pupils will demonstrate "the Sunday night supper;" on Wednesday the O'Keefe Junior High will show how to make "quick breads;" on Thursday the Bass Junior High will cover "the home luncheon," and on Friday the home economics class of the Girls' High will demonstrate "fruit desserts."

Another big attraction at the show will be a special electrical exhibit made by the extension division of the State Agricultural college, at Athens, showing in an allegorical manner the world's search for health, carrying the visitor through various stages from Ponce de Leon's search for the Fountain of Youth, through the age of cosmetics, medicine, surgery and plastic surgery and to the present period. This exhibit also will show a complete "house of health" constructed of various products from milk, including butter, cheese and ice cream. Phil Marlott, of Athens, will have charge of this exhibit.

Seventy-eight exhibits and demonstrations of food products will be made by manufacturers and distributors and the management promises to fill every appetite of every visitor.

The food show is given under management of the Atlanta Retail Food Dealers' association with B. I. Barge, general chairman, and a committee in charge consisting of J. H. Bullock, J. R. Morris, M. Weinberg, W. A. Byers, W. E. Sheats and J. H. Mer-

SOUTHERN MOTORS PROMOTERS FINED AND GIVEN TERMS

Houston, Texas, November 7.—Jacques E. Blevins, former president of the Southern Motors company, convicted in federal court here early this week on charges of using the mails to defraud, was sentenced today to three years in the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth and fined $10,000.

Seven other defendants were given sentences varying from suspended terms in jail to fines.

"Blevins came to my office this morning," Judge Hutcheson stated, "and asked that the burden fall on him. I am sure he was honest in his plea and it will make things easier for him.

"If there was a scape goat in the case, it was W. J. Kain," the judge declared, and added that "R. Y. Keith was the least responsible morally."

Sister Gets Her Vengeance

:-: DENVER BANKER INDICTED IN FAILURE :-:

Upon Brother After 10 Years

Kansas City, November 7.—Annually for 10 years there has appeared in the personal column of a Denver newspaper a short "In Memoriam" paragraph, signed "Your only daughter, Flora E. Bishop Stevens, Kansas City, Mo."

The other day, Mrs. Stevens sent a different notice to the Denver paper for publication. It read:

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine."

Through the medium of a newspaper paragraph, Mrs. Stevens has attempted for years to shame her brother, Frank Lee Bishop, Denver banker. Recently Bishop was indicted in connection with the collapse of the Globe National Bank, of Denver, of which he was an officer.

"I hope my last notice reached him," said Mrs. Stevens today. "Then he will know he is being repaid in kind for what he did to me."

According to the sister's story, her parents left their property to Frank years ago in Denver.

"He was rich; I was in moderate circumstances. When I tried to get my share of the property, Frank showed me the deed and I failed to get any of the property.

"He ignored my pleas for part of my mother's personal belongings.

"Each year I had printed the memorial to my mother to shame my brother.

"I haven't heard from him in 30 years."

Prohibitionists Told To Seek More Local Self-Government in Enforcement of Dry Law.

YOST MAKES PLEA FOR DRY COLLEGES

Chicago, November 7.—The sudden collapse of his dreams for a conference and perhaps national football championship failed to cool the ardor of Coach Fielding H. (Hurry Up) Yost Saturday night when he addressed the delegates to the biennial convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

Less than four hours after the humble Purple eleven of Northwestern had defeated his championship team 3 to 2, Coach Yost was appealing for "strict prohibition enforcement among our colleges," in a fiery manner that elicited much applause.

Coach Yost declared that there was a prevalence of "tippling among students" in the universities. He declared that it was affecting athletes and might lead to the disintegration of college sports.

"Drastic and unprecedented steps must be taken if we are to stop the selling of liquor in the education centers of the nation," Yost said.

Chicago, November 7.—(AP)—A group of federal officials, advocates and enforcers of the Volstead law, today advised the Anti-Saloon League convention to continue its fight to keep America dry and preserve self-government and the constitution.

Three United States senators, the head of the enforcement branch of the government, the commandant of the coast guard, a federal judge and a district attorney comprised today's speakers.

At the close of the session, the voice of William Jennings Bryan, delivering a speech on "The Ideal Republic," came from a phonograph.

All the federal officers were agreed that liquor enforcement and observance rapidly are squelching the bootleg traffic, but appeals frequently were heard for the leaguers to create and reawaken a strong public sentiment for enforcement of the law by local officers.

Advise Local Enforcement.

The drys were advised to take a tip from the "personal liberty shouters" by agitating for more complete local self-government to perpetuate the American principles of democratic government.

"There are too many people now running to congress for laws which the local police and judiciary ought to be enforcing under state and municipal regulation," said Edwin A. Olson, United States district attorney for northern Illinois.

He urged the convention especially to prevent passage of a federal gun law, secure repeal of the federal auto theft law, and similar legislation covering such acts as stealing from freight cars.

"We are no longer going to receive such cases as petty bootleg arrests," he said. "You folks want to show your intestinal fortitude, and when your local officials will not clean up your communities, burn them up."

Three Senators Sound Warnings.

Senator Frank B. Willis, of Ohio; Senator Arthur Robinson, of Indiana, and Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, all sounded warnings for the Anti-Saloon league to hold its organization together and organize further lest the liquor traffic creep back into this country.

3,005 FAVOR, 2,177 OPPOSED TO UNIFICATION

Six Conferences Included In Unofficial Total, Although Vote Has Not Been Properly Certified.

13 CONFERENCES ARE STILL TO VOTE

Unification Is 881 Votes Shy of Three-Fourths Majority Required To Make Plan Effective.

Nashville, Tenn., November 7.—(AP) The official vote of the annual conferences, Methodist Episcopal church, south, cast on unification with the Methodist Episcopal church, is 2,630 for and 2,051 against unification, say the official figures announced tonight by Dr. A. J. Lamar and John W. Barton, custodians of the official vote at the Methodist Publishing house.

Six conferences which have voted are not included in the official results because of a non-certification of their votes. They are the Pacific, Brazil, Central Brazil, South Brazil, Mexico and Louisiana.

The secular press bureau at Methodist headquarters compiles the votes as following, including these 6 of the 30 conferences which have voted, but have not certified their votes to the church headquarters:

3,005 For, 2,177 Against.

For unification, 3,005; against unification, 2,177.

Votes short of a three-fourths majority, in view of the number of votes recorded, 881.

Under the official vote as announced, the number short of the constituitonal three-fourths majority is given as 878.

The constitution of the church requires that for the plan of unification to succeed, a three-fourths majority of the combined vote, for and against, must be in favor of unification.

As to the method of computing the vote, Dr. Lamar and Mr. Barton say a three-fourths majority of the total votes cast is necessary in favor of the plan for its adoption. That means, that when all the annual conferences have voted on the pending plan, a tabulation of all the votes cast will be made. Should three-fourths of this total vote be cast for unification, it is adopted. Otherwise, it is defeated.

Florida To Vote Last.

The last conference which is to vote is the Florida, on December 3. At that time, the final word may be said. Thirteen conferences of the church are still to vote.

By action of the general conference of the denomination, Dr. Lamar and Mr. Barton are the custodians of the official vote. As explained by Dr. Lamar, senior member of the publishing house, the official form to be used in recording the vote is prepared in triplicate, each certificate of votes being signed by the president and the secretary of the annual conference. One copy of each certificate

DAVIS CONDEMNS HOUSING OF ARMY

War Secretary Suggests Sale of Army Real Estate in Florida To Help Solve Problem.

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Time and the elements rapidly are robbing the army of house and home, Secretary Davis of the war department, said today in a statement advocating congressional approval of a building program.

The military housing situation is so bad, he said, that it ranked as "the most pressing problem which confronts the war department."

If congress will authorize it, he added, a good part of the expense for needed buildings can be met by using proceeds from the sale of army real estate, including some in Florida.

This picture of the army's plight was sketched by the secretary in a formal statement.

Upwards of 37,000 officers and men living in temporary shelter, mostly wooden barracks thrown up hastily during the world war.

One regiment in Hawaii housed in a temporary building erected in 1913.

One in Panama in a temporary cantonment originally designed to house canal laborers.

One at Fort Benning, Ga., that has had nothing but canvas over its head for six years.

Army hospitals and nurses quartered in war-time shacks.

About 10,000 horses and mules "in very flimsy stables."

As an example of the impracticability of such a situation, the secretary said that last year 250 fires among the dry timbers of army structures destroyed property costing originally more than $1,500,000, while much time that should have been devoted to military training was spent by army detachments laboring to keep their buildings "liveable."

TWELVE PERSONS SUFFER INJURIES IN CRASHES HERE

Four Are Hurt in Three-Cornered Collision on McDonough Road Saturday Night.

Twelve persons were seriously injured in bicycle and automobile accidents in Atlanta Saturday.

Norma Cort, 5, daughter of A. L. Cort, of 226 Bryan street, suffered a fractured skull and is in a serious condition at Grady hospital following the accident in front of the home. The child was rushed to Grady hospital and given treatment. Police were unable to learn the name of the driver of the machine which struck the child.

Several persons were brought to Grady hospital Saturday night suffering from injuries which they told physicians they received in automobile accidents.

Three-Cornered Crash.

Four persons were slightly injured early Saturday night in a three-cornered collision on McDonough road near Henderson's crossing. According to Call Officers W. A. Goode and R. H. Lindsay the machines were driven by Frank Deprano, of 146 South avenue; J. J. Griffin, of 103 Luckie street and W. Hughes, of 599 Washington street.

In the car with Deprano was his wife. Neither of the four was injured seriously. They were given first aid treatment and dismissed. According to police the cars were driven by Hughes and Griffin collided first and Deprano's car then crashed into them. Hughes was arrested on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated.

Noah Strickler, of 296 Simpson street, was badly bruised in the afternoon when struck down by a bicycle. He was taken to Grady for treatment. Police had no report of the accident.

Miss A. E. Lyons, Brown building, was knocked down and bruised by an automobile at Five Points Saturday night. According to Patrolman W. E. Chatham, the car was operated by Mrs. A. Moss, of the Imperial Court apartments. Miss Lyons was dismissed after treatment. No case was made against Mrs. Moss.

S. M. Beckham, 26, of 135 Ivy street, was given first aid treatment for injuries which he told physicians he received when struck down by an automobile. He did not state where the accident occurred and police had no report of it.

Robert Dupree Hurt.

Robert Dupree, 9, of 875 Whitehall street, was struck by an automobile and seriously injured during the afternoon. The child was playing in the street in front of the home, police were told. The name of the driver was not learned. The child was given first aid treatment at Grady and dismissed.

Miss Janie Bedford, 18, of 144 Lovejoy street, was given first aid treatment for injuries. She could not tell how she was injured and police had no report of the accident.

A. B. Scott, of Houston, Texas, living temporarily at 87 West North avenue, was struck by an automobile driven by Sam Patterson, negro. The accident happened at Peachtree street and Edgewood avenue, when Scott attempted to cross the street in the face of a red light, police said. Scott was not seriously injured.

Louie Bailey, 17, messenger boy was knocked from his bicycle by an automobile on Marietta street. His injuries are not serious, according to police.

King of Siam Has New Wife To Insure Heir

Latest Mate Is Expected To Give Birth to Child Soon.

Bangkok, Siam, November 7.—The king of Siam, who recently demoted his queen to a lower rank because she had failed to provide an heir to the throne, has raised a lady named Chao Chom Suvadana, to the rank of royal consort.

It was announced simultaneously that the new queen expected shortly to give birth to a child. She is quite young and last year visited Singapore, Penang and the Malay states in company with the king.

The proclamation announcing Chom's elevation observes that "the new queen has served the king with faithfulness and love, wherefore it is fitting that she should wish this high estate."

Coolidge Favors Non-Partisan Tax Reduction Plan

New G. O. P. House Leader Says President Approves Program Prepared by House Committee.

INSURGENT LEADER OPPOSES MEASURE

Senator Norris Charges Big Business Back of Move To Halt Publicity On Income Taxes.

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—President Coolidge was said today by Representative Tilson, of Connecticutt, the new republican house leader to look with favor on the tax reduction program mapped out on a non-partisan basis by republicans and democrats of the ways and means committee.

Leaving the white house after a talk with the president, Representative Tilson said Mr. Coolidge had given the impression that he approved but had refrained from committing himself definitely.

While Mr. Tilson himself approved most of the provisions of the new bill he thought a mistake had been made in lowering the normal rates. He was not inclined to question the committee's judgment on this score.

Maximum Reduction.

In Mr. Tilson's opinion $300,000,000 is the safe maximum for tax reduction.

Senator Norris, of Nebraska, a leader of the republican insurgent group, today declared himself against several provisions of the proposed bill.

"I'd like to give the little fellow a bigger reduction than the house committee has given," Senator Norris said, "and a less reduction to the big fellow. I don't think we ought to put the surtax maximum down to 20 per cent. It ought to come down some but to just what point I am not prepared to say.

Opposes Estate Tax Cut.

"I am opposed to the reduction of the estate tax. It is the least burdensome and the easiest of all taxes to enforce. The arguments that it should be left to the state is indefensible. You cannot get uniform laws in the states and if the federal government steps out of this field of taxation you will see competition between the states to attract big business by promising exemption for inheritance taxes just as the state of Florida has done."

The Nebraska senator opposed elimination of the publicity feature of the bill, asserting it should be enlarged to include the entire tax return of every tax payer. He charged big business interests were controlling the framing of the measure.

View of Smoot.

A very different view of the tentative house committee bill was expressed by Chairman Smoot of the senate finance committee before which the measure ultimately will come. He said he did not think it was necessary to increase the exemptions for married men from $2,500 to $3,500 and that he thought the inheritance tax should be repealed entirely.

"All other features of the house committee bill," he said, "are very

SYMPHONY SERIES WILL BEGIN TODAY

Initial Program Expected To Offer Exceptional Range — Special Features Are Arranged.

BY RALPH T. JONES.

Atlantans who are fortunate enough to find seats at the opening concert of the 1925-1926 series of the Atlanta Symphony orchestra this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at Loew's Grand theater, are going to be pleasantly surprised at the vast improvement in the work of the orchestra over last season.

That some Atlantans will not be able to secure seats is practically certain. As has been the custom in past seasons, the entire first and second floors of the theater will be reserved for holders of members' reserved seat tickets in the symphony association. The uppper gallery will be open to the general public, admission free; but it is believed that all available space will be filled efore the hour for the concert arrives. Those who have not secured reserved seat tickets and who fail to get to the theater early enough for the free seat admissions will have to bear their disappointment and apply at the Phillips & Crew Piano company office, Peachtree and Ellis streets, for reserved seats for the balance of the season on sale next week.

Eight concerts are to be given in all, one every alternate Sunday afternoon during the fall and winter months.

The orchestra at numerous rehear-

H. L. Sinyer Co. Will Present Splendid Food Exhibit Here

Handling condiments, salad dressings and relishes fit to grace the table of a king, the H. L. Singer company has made it possible for the family of moderate means to enjoy the delicious taste, the zest and the exquisite aroma of these products at an expenditure that permits of the real enjoyment of such delicacies without the feeling that anyone has been extravagant. These are products of the famous Gelfand company, of Baltimore, Md.

In other words, the Singer company in taking over the exclusive sale of the Gelfand products, brings the "Famous Family of Five," including Mayonnaise, Combination Relish, Thousand Island Dressing and Peppy Nut Sandwich Spread within the means of every home in the city.

These famous products, which have received indorsement of internationally famed chefs, and which have been given the highest awards at every exhibition in which they have been entered, are also "regular" upon the menus of high-class hotels, colleges and hospitals of this and other countries.

Five Grand Prizes.

During the past week they received awards of grand prize at the World's International exposition now being held in Paris. All five of the products were entered and each member of the "family" received a grand prize award. The honor is accentuated when it is considered that Paris is regarded as the home of good food and the mother of chefs.

The Gelfand company, catering only to the best type of food purveying concerns and seeking the patronage of only the best type of institutions and homes, will have a display at the coming Pure Food exposition in the city auditorium that will perhaps be a revelation to the people of this city in more ways that one.

The visiting public will have an opportunity of testing the delicacy of these products—of tasting the exquisite condiments and Mayonnaise that have made this company famous from coast to coast, and it is expected that this will become one of the most popular displays at the pure food show.

Among the really good things that the people will have the opportunity of tasting will be the famous combination Olive and Mayonnaise; the Thousand Island dressing; Peppy Nut Sandwich Spread and the delicious Mayonnaise made by the Gelfand company.

Some of the leading brands of condiments and good things for the table that have been featured for more than 20 years and which will be among the delicacies to be demonstrated by the Singer company at the Pure Food show will be Thanksgiving brand of canned vegetables; Sweet Violet brand of canned fruits; Gold Bar brand of canned fruits; Schimwel's brand of jellies, jams and preserves, and others.

The Gelfand company, putting up the products named in the opening paragraph and described at length in this article, have headquarters in Baltimore, from which city this company has done an ever-increasing trade with all parts of the country.

The home of the H. L. Singer company is in Atlanta, the metropolis of Dixie, and this high-type jobbing house caters only to the best hotels, hospitals, colleges and merchants.

The products to be exhibited by the Singer company at the Pure Food show will be specially adapted to use of young and growing children, the materials and ingredients employed being especially beneficial for the child, it was pointed out.

The chronology of the H. L. Singer company is a most interesting one, in that it affects the careers of two of Atlanta's pioneer merchants—H. L. Singer, head of the firm, has been active in its affairs for 27 years; W. O. Stamps, who is also well known and popular among the high-class food purveyors of Atlanta and the south, has served an equal term of years.

This famous firm started business in 1896, and the heads of the firm have had the satisfaction of witnessing a steady growth in business and a rapid expansion of its interests.

Henard Co. To Make Pure Food. Show at City Auditorium

As has been the case ever since Henard came to Atlanta, the exhibit of the Henard Mayonnaise company at the food show, which opens at the auditorium tomorrow for the week, will be prominent in display, pleasing to the ladies and popular with the retailers.

Pat O'Brien, vice president of the Henard company, is a strong believer in finding what is right and good and then sticking to it. The recipes and methods of manufacture of his products, mayonnaise, sandwich relish and Thousand Island, were thoroughly tested and approved before being offered to the public, and as they were found to be correct, there has never been the slightest deviation from the original offering.

Carrying out this same plan, Mr. O'Brien has found that the food show in Atlanta annually is good, and he has had his Atlanta-made products on display in every show since his plant was opened and has occupied the same exhibit booth, until now anyone who has been a patron of these shows knows without questioning just where to find Pat O'Brien and the Henard exhibit.

Taking unusual pride in the manner of displaying his products and particularly because they are Atlanta-made, Mr. O'Brien goes to more than usual trouble to see that his booth is one of the most attractive in the show and he promises that his display this year will be more attractive than any heretofore.

SLOAT SALES AGENCY BUSINESS INCREASES

Frank B. Sloat sales agency, a wholesale firm located at 228 Marietta street, reports that for the past three months its business has shown a tremendous increase, especially Phenix cheese, which for the month of November has shown an increase of over 35 per cent.

Other products handled are Omega flour and Meadow Gold butter, also a line of food specialties. Before opening this office the agency made a survey of principal cities of the south and found that Atlanta held for the concern a bigger and brighter future than any of the others. H. E. Davies is in charge of the Atlanta office.

U. S. Operation of Shoals Is Urged Upon Coolidge By Senator W. J. Harris

Georgia, Solon Urges Coolidge Have Government Experiment With Giant Power Plant.

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Operation of the Muscle Shoals project for several years by the government before any private leasing contract is entered into was urged upon President Coolidge today by Senator Harris, democrat, Georgia.

The president was told that the south was vitally concerned over production of nitrate at low prices and that this phase of the Muscle Shoals project should take precedence over generation of power.

Senator Harris said he believed that instead of leasing the properties, the government should operate them, conducting experiments as to how much power is needed for production of nitrate before turning the huge plant over to private control.

Farms of the south have been used for so many years for cotton production that they are vitally in need of fertilizer, the senator said, and farmers believe that Muscle Shoals affords them an avenue of relief.

It is also important, he added, that the government promote nitrate production so that it would not be dependent on imports from Chile in the event of war.

During his conference with the president. Senator Harris dimissed the merchant marine problem, declaring he was opposed to abolition of the shipping board but believes that it was not functioning efficiently.

While he declined to elaborate on his views, he said he believed there should be some curtailment of the board's administrative powers.

SHOALS COMMISSION UNABLE TO AGREE.

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—With only a week remaining of the time set by President Coolidge for a report the Muscle Shoals commission is still unable to come together on unanimous recommendations.

A final meeting has been set tentatively for Thursday but the two dissenting commissioners, H. A. Curtis and William McClellan, have asked for more time. The president has not indicated whether he will extend the time as it is known he hoped to obtain the report in time to include it in his message to congress.

The request for more time is not regarded by those informed with the situation as meaning that the two minority members are considering signing the majority report, which provides for government operation if a suitable private lease cannot be obtained, but that they hope to get together on a single minority report.

Chairman McKenzie does not plan to return to Washington and has turned over his proxy to Senator Dial, who will preside over the next session of the commission. For several weeks the chairman attempted to get the full commission behind one report but finally abandoned the attempt.

Don't stay headachy, bilious, constipated, sick! Take one or two "Cascarets" any time to mildly stimulate your liver and start your bowels. Then you will feel fine, your head becomes clear, stomach sweet, tongue pink and skin rosy.

Nothing else cleans, sweetens, and refreshes the entire system like pleasant, harmless candy-like "Cascarets." They never gripe, overact, or sicken. Directions for men, women, children on each box—drug stores.—(adv.)

AN OLD RECIPE TO RESTORE GRAY HAIR

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use for only 75 cents. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—(adv.)

ago and since its establishment has grown to a commanding position in the southern publicity field.

Eastman, Scott and company has handled many of the successful advertising programs in the south.

The organiznton affords specialists in the various lines of work the agency is called upon to do and is located in large quarters in the Glenn building.

Experienced Staff.

In the organization is Paul Warwick, well known as a newspaper writer in Atlanta before entering the firm. In his present connection Mr. Warwick has been responsible for some of the most successful advertising handled by the concern.

Bruce Moran, head of the merchandising department, has had long experience in the advertising field, both with agencies and publishers.

J. W. Sieverling is in charge of research work for the company, has also had wide advertising experience with Fuller and Smith, large agency of Cleveland. He has traveled nationally as an investigator of market conditions.

Also in the research department is Charles E. Boynton, Jr., of Atlanta, a recent graduate of Princeton university, who has taken special courses during his college work that fit him for his chosen profession. Eastman, Scott and company's art director, Willard Jamieson, is an artist of ability and was previous to his present affiliation visualizer for Lord and Thomas, one of the country's largest agencies. K. L. Green, of New York, also is affiliated with the Atlanta concern in the capacity of New York art director, so that such art as can not be secured in Atlanta may be bought by him there conveniently.

Members Well Known.

James E. Winn, head of the business department, is considered an authority on the merits of various media in relation to given markets and contributes a wide experience in this highly-specialized field.

John Stebbins is in charge of the mechanical production department, which includes engraving, composition and printing.

Actually supervising the copy is a special advertising committee composed of W. R. C. Smith, Frank Adair and Frank Neely. The budgeting and finance committee is made up of William Candler, Milton Bell and A. J. Orme.

AMERICAN MISSIONS IN SYRIA ARE BURNED

PARIS EDITOR NAMED TO SUCCEED SARRAIL.

Paris, Novemeber 7.—(AP)—Senator Henry de Jouvenel, chief editor of The Matin, was officially named French high commissioner for Syria today to succeed General Sarrail, whose administration of the troubled region has been the object of much criticism.

BRIAND TO PROPOSE WIDEST AUTONOMY.

Paris, November 7.—(AP)—The semi-official Havas agency says Foreign Minister Briand will propose to parliament that the populations of Syria, which are held under French mandate, be given the widest autonomy as soon as order is reestablished.

DAMASCUS IN FEAR OF ATTACK BY REBELS.

Jerusalem, November 7.—Damascus is living in constant dread that rebel forces, now scattered in all directions around the city, will again invade the ancient city.

Frequent attacks against the French in outlying regions are reported.

Homs, to the north of Damascus, is reported in imminent danger of falling to the insurgents. This would choke communication between Damascus and Aleppo.

Tribesmen heretofore loyal to the French are reported wavering. The Boalas are said to be joining the guerilla forces, who have organized explosion units to destroy tracks and bridges in their scheme of isolating Damascus entirely.

200 Arrests Reported.

Two hundred arrests of notable persons in Damascus are reported.

Meanwhile, there is a growing movement to boycott French goods, and another movement looking toward the possible establishment of an American mandate over Syria. French agents, who are telling outside Syrians that France is willing to make a liberal administration, such as prevails in Britain's Mesopotamian mandate, are being informed that the Syrians want to shake off the French yoke entirely.

HOLY WAR THREATENS FRENCHMEN IN SYRIA.

Paris, November 7.—(AP)—A holy war against the French in Syria threatens. The Arabs are reported to have joined the Djebel Druse tribesmen and are prepared to fight to the death in a crusade against the mandatory power.

Unofficial advices relate that the rebellious movement is increasing in strength, and that provisional governments are being established by the insurgents in various sections of the country, where they are in control.

Meanwhile, Damascus is sorely beset. The Djebel Druses still surround the already battered city, with which communication is reported to have been severed by the cutting of the railway, telephone and telegraph lines. The Druses at intervals continue to fire in the city, and those of the populace who are able to do so, are fleeing toward Jerusalem, Alexandretta bay and Aleppo. All street traffic has ceased and shops are closed.

MITCHELL DEFENSE REQUESTS TWENTY MORE WITNESSES

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Colonel William Mitchell on trial by court-martial because of his public criticism of army and navy air administration, called today for subpoenas for 20 more witnesses.

Those added to the list included Brigadier General W. L. Kenley, Ponca City, Okla., and Radioman Otis Gilbert Stantz, of the naval Hawaiian flight plane PN-9 No. 1.

Claiming that they were not able to detect gas fumes in the candy kitchen, officials of the company blamed the illness of the five young women on food they had for lunch. Those overcome in the plant were: Miss Lois Dorough, of 42 Fortress street; Miss Irene Knight, of 15 Pritchard street; Miss Annie Mae Ellis, of 16 Whitaker street; Miss Mary Wheeler, of 121 West Merritts avenue, and Mrs. J. COOLIDGE FAVORS TAX REDUCTION PLAN good. In fact the whole measure is a wonderful improvement all the way along the line.

Fight Publicity Repeal.

Both Senators Borah and Walsh declared they would fight the proposed repeal of the provision in the present law, permitting publicity of income tax returns and would ask for record votes. Senator Norris also asked that greater cuts be made on the smaller income rates and less reduction of the surtax schedule.

A unanimous vote by the house ways and means committee does not appear likely at the present time, but a majority of democrats and republicans are believed certain to follow the indorsement of the measure so far given by their party leaders on the committee.

In starting revision Monday of the excise rates, the committee will consider all of the schedules as a unit, deciding first on the apportionment among the various levies it will allow for reduction. Among the rates which the committee has been asked to repeal in this class are those on automobiles, trucks, tires and accessories, admissions, dues, jewelry and virtually every other tax now existing on special forms of business.

Repeal of all of these would cut government revenues by almost $400,000,000 annually, whereas only $100,000,000 of the treasury estimated surplus remains available for further reduction by the committee.

sals which have been held for the opening concert demonstrated a great improvement over its work of past years. This, in large part, is due to the cumulative benefit of playing together.

The orchestra this year also is somewhat better in personnel. There are 70 performers, a few of whom are new to the organization. Brasses and woodwinds in particular show a tremendous improvement.

Enrico Liede again will wield the conductor's baton.

Looking over the opening program lovers of music will immediately realize that the five numbers included have been chosen by a master musician. Ranging through the entire range of orchestral types, each number stands supreme of its kind and each gives a different opportunity for different instrumental effects.

Special Features.

Tom Standring, the young concert maestro, has one of the greatest opportunities of his career in the Mendelssohn "Rondo Capriccioso," which is in third place on the program. Mr. Standring's work with the violin is magnificent in this piece.

Then there follows, in fourth place, the lovely Siegfried Idyll, one of the most exquisite things Wagner ever wrote. The cello work in this will attract popular attention.

The closing number, which will send the audience home to Sunday's supper table with a thrill and a tingle in their veins, is the glorious Rakoczy march by Berlioz.

Weber's "Preciosa," overture, and the Bacchanale L'Automne by Glazounow are the two opening selections.

won," said Senator Sheppard. "We have driven the saloon into hiding, but we must keep on until we have exterminated every root and branch."

Senator Robinson reviewed the history of nations in the past which have fallen and disappeared "when the people went on a drunken debauch." Even in our day, he said, America has passed all countries in world leadership, while empires have fallen and ceased to be.

Probation Judge Speaks.

"I want the time never to come when historians can write about the rise and fall of the American constitution."

Federal Judge George W. McClintic, of the southern district of West Virginia, who gained the title of "probation judge" for releasing convicted criminals under the new probation law, said it had added to the judicial powers "the divine quality of mercy," and indorsed its application in saving for society many first offenders.

Both General L. C. Andrews, head of the prohibition enforcement forces, and Rear Admiral C. F. Billard, commandant of the coast guard, declared that enforcement is making progress and will make still greater when the reorganization forces are able to put into effect their new plans.

Progress Made.

Explaining in some detail the recent reorganization of the federal enforcement machinery, Mr. Andrews said he believed important progress had been made in the direction of better enforcement. He emphasized that it was his policy to fight vigorously the big operators in the illegitimate liquor traffic and at the same time to protect in every way the legitimate industry in its use of industrial alcohol or production of cereal beverages.

"The public is constantly holding the prohibition forces responsible for the enforcement of the prohibition laws," Mr. Andrews continued. "We are not alone responsible. And a public realization of this fact is vital to their successful enforcement.

Support of Courts.

"In reality, the treasury can do little without the full support and prompt carry-through of the judicial machinery. Our duty is two fold—to collect the evidence of law violation and present it to the district attorney and to supervise and regulate the source of supply for legitimate traffic as well as prevent the use of the sources of illegitimate traffic. In both these phases of our work, success depends upon the prompt, sympathetic action of the judicial machinery.

"We share with the department of justice the responsibility for this law enforcement. It is essential, therefore that public opinion is focused upon the work of the district attorneys and the judges as well as upon the work of the prohibition agents. . . .

Success of Law.

"This brings me directly to the reason for my presence here today. The successful outcome of this prohibition law demands on the part of all organizations interested in community welfare as affected by prohibition that they seriously and vigorously resume the campaign designed to bring about a state of mind in the communities which not only believe in prohibition but insist upon its enforcement, particularly by those holding public office."

Mr. Andrews regretted that the prohibition unit of the treasury had been "treated unfairly." He told the Anti-Saloon league representatives that although they believed in the law and greatly desired its successful operation they had, nevertheless been standing back and leaving it to the federal government to enforce. Such an attitude among local communities put a burden on the federal government which it cannot carry and "which the law never intended that it should carry," he said.

Taking the position that the federal government will have done its full share when it eliminates the sources of supply and the inter-community traffic in liquor, Mr. Andrews said the government "can hope to do this" only if its energies may be confined to that task.

Dry Navy Problems.

A picture of the problems confronting the coast guard in the rum war off the American coast was given by Rear Admiral A. C. Billard, commandant of the coast guard, in an address prepared for delivery to the convention.

"The coast guard with the additional resources voted last year, has tremendously curtailed the smuggling of liquor on the northern Atlantic seaboard since last spring," Admiral Billard said.

"It must not be understood, however, that foreign vessels laden with liquor no longer hover over our coasts," he declared. "Rum ships in greatly reduced numbers are discovered in ever-changing positions."

The admiral quoted a government chemist of the New York prohibition office that there is virtually no liquor coming in from Europe now.

Atlanta Hears Music Club Concert Stars Over Radio

MAIER AND PATTISON THRILL LISTENERS FROM N. Y.

Maier and Pattison, world famous concert pianists who play in two-piano recital at the City Auditorium November 20 under management of the Atlanta Music club, were introduced to Atlanta music lovers Friday night over radio, it was disclosed Saturday by Mrs. Cliff C. Hatcher, president of the music club.

The pair, one of the featured concert numbers on the all-star season sponsored by the Steinway company, played Friday for rad io station WGY at Schenectady, N. Y., as the radio event of the week.

"Atlantans who heard them were simply thrilled at their playing," Mrs. Hatcher said. "And the foretaste of their concert here assures one of the most enjoyable events of the music club's season."

Only the acknowledged master pianists of the age are permitted to appear on the Steinway programs, it was explained. Percy Granger and Joseph Hoffman already have played, in addition to Maier and Pattison.

Their concert here will mark the conclusion of the music club's "all-American" concert month, which was opened by the San Francisco Chamber Music society November 2. Both pianists are of American birth and began their musical studies in America before going abroad to complete their concert preparation under French and German masters. They have appeared with equal success in Boston and Berlin, in New York and Paris, in Chicago and London, having made two triumphal tours of the world before finally returning to America several years ago.

"These two stand near the top of the group of artists who have made the world recognize America as a real influence in music as well as in commerce and we are glad of the chance to let the south hear them," Mrs. Hatcher declared.

CONVENTION PLANS MADE BY ROUNTREE

Birmingham, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—J. A. Rountree, director general, United States Good Roads association, after a five weeks' tour of the west, visiting the states of California, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Illinois and Kentucky, has returned to headquarters here in Birmingham. He traveled more than 7,000 miles by rail, and 2,000 miles in an automobile, making more than 40 speeches before the various commerical and civic bodies in the interest of the good roads. He is very much elated over his successful tour.

Rountree's visit was for the purpose of arousing the people to fight for the continuation of federal aid by congress, and to arrange for the fourteenth annual convention of the United States Good Roads association, the tenth annual convention of the Bankhead National Highway association, and the United States good roads show, that will be held in Santa Monica, Calif., June 7-12, 1926.

He reports that all details of holding the annual conventions were arranged, and that he will open temporary headquarters February 1, at the Miramar hotel, Santa Monica, Calif., with a full force of assistants to push the work of promoting and arranging for these great conventions. He reports that the greatest enthusiasm prevails in California over these meetings and that the cities and towns throughout the state are cooperating with Santa Monica in arranging for the entertainment and promotion of the same.

There is considerable opposition to the continuance of federal aid by congress for the building of good roads throughout the nation. Rountree visited the various states to arouse interest and to put the people on guard and to rally them for the fight that will come up in congress in December. While absent he extended invitations to Governors Dern, of Utah; Nellie Taylor Ross, of Wyoming; Morley, of Colorado; Fields, of Kentucky, to attend the conventions at Santa Monica, next year. Assurances were given by each one of these governors that they would attend, provided that official duties would not prevent. Already six other governors have accepted and promised to attend convention. The outlook is quite bright for a wonderful successful convention.

UNIVERSITY PLANS $300,000 BUILDING

Athens, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Plans for a new administration building at the University of Georgia are gradually materializing. The trustees of the war memorial fund at their recent meeting authorized the firm of Hentz, Reid & Adler, Atlanta, to draw plans of a building to house the administration offices of the university, the school of commerce and the school of journalism. These plans are now complete, allotting the first floor to journalism, the main floor to administration and the second floor to commerce.

The original plan of the trustees was to contribute one-half of the cost of the building and to have the state pay one-half. The legislature at its last session, however, did not see fit to appropriate any funds for building purposes at the university.

The trustees of the fund, therefore, are planning to start the construction and carry it as far as possible without state aid. The architects have been asked to get bids for the building, the approximate cost of which will be $300,000.

ORGANIZATION FORMED FOR CHEROKEE TRAIL

Adairsville, Ga., November 7—(Special.)—At a mass meeting held here for the purpose of perfecting a permanent organization for the Cherokee Trail, a proposed cross-state highway, the following officers were elected:

M. L. Upshaw, Rydal, chairman; N. C. Anderson, Adairsville, vice chairman; O. B. Bishop, Adairsville, secretary and treasurer.

The following were elected as a board of directors:

Homer Davis, Ed Horton, John P. Davis, R. B. Combs and W. J. Biddy, from Rome; S. J. Whaley, C. W. Satterfield, R. L. McCollum, J. L. Hunt, Joe P. Bowdoin, W. P. Whitworth and J. R. Henderson from Adairsville; Frank L. Linn, from Rydal; S. R. Bradford and J. B. Wilmoth from Pine Log; R. C. Sharpe, Waleska.

A finance committe ecomposed of E. D. Veach, W. P. Whitworth and W. J. Biddy was appointed to raise sufficient funds to secure the route and to put the project over.

There was much enthusiasm and a splendid spirit shown at the meeting.

The Cherokee Trail is a proposed road east and west just halfway between Chattanooga and Atlanta, extending from Toccoa on the east to Rome on the west.

Worries About Sick Wife--Now She's Well

Because his wife had stomach trouble, T. Williams worried a great deal. He got her to try the mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc. (known as Adlerika), and now his worries are over. She says she feels like a new woman.

Many people keep the OUTSIDE body clean but let their INSIDE body stay full of gas and poisons. Give the inside a REAL cleansing with the mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as sold under the name of Adlerika. This acts on BOTH upper and lower bowel, eliminates metabolic poisons and removes old matter which you never thought was in your system, and which caused sour stomach, nervousness, sleeplessness, headache, etc.

Whenever you eat too much heavy food, let Adlerika REMOVE the undigested surplus and leave you feeling fine. ONE spoonful relieves GAS and takes away that full, bloated feeling. Even if your bowels move every day, Adlerika brings out much additional matter which might cause trouble. Don't waste time with pills or tablets, but let Adlerika give your stomach and bowels QUICK relief.

What Doctors Say

Dr. G. Eggers reports Adlerika is the best medicine he has used in 57 years.

Dr. W. H. Bernhart writes he could not get along in his practice without Adlerika.

Dr. J. J. Weaver, a doctor for 50 years, says he knows no medicine better than Adlerika.

Dr. L. Langlois prescribes Adlerika regularly with GOOD effect.

J. E. Puckett writes: "After using Adlerika I feel better than for 20 years. AWFUL impurities were eliminated from my system."

Adlerika is a big surprise to people who have used only ordinary bowel and stomach medicines because of its REAL and quick action. Sold by leading druggists everywhere.—(adv.)

Ballard Company Gives Premiums Under New Plan

Ballard's Obelisk flour, which is one of the most popular brands known to the grocery trade, has increased its already large sales by the introduction of profit-sharing coupons, according to A. J. Vaughan, manager of the Atlanta branch of the big milling company.

The Ballard company is located in Louisville, Ky., where the largest winter wheat flouring mills in existence is operated. The Ballard company turns out thousands of barrels of highest grade flour every day, shipping it to every part of the nation, and it is believed that there are few households that have not used this well-known brand.

Ballard's Obelisk has been a famous flour for many years, the company having been established in 1880. From a small beginning this company has ground flour of such excellence that its capacity has been raised to 3,000 barrels a day to meet the great demand for its plain and self-rising brands.

It was about the time that the Egyptian obelisk, known as "Cleopatra's Needle," was placed in Central park, New York, after a most sensational journey from the north African country to the shores of the new world, that Charles T. and Thurston Ballard, names honored in the manufacturing history of Kentucky, built their first mill in Louisville. The sentiment connected with this splendid gift from France to the United States decided the Ballard brothers to name their leading brand of flour for the obelisk. The name proved a most fitting and successful one, and has made the product of the Ballard mill famous all over the world.

Ballard's Obelisk flour is made with the most scrupulous care, the soft winter wheat from which it is ground being cleaned five times before its entrance into the rollers that grind it into the beautiful creamy substance that makes such splendid bread and rolls. Only about 40 per cent of the whole grain is used in the flour, the cream of the wheat being separated in the milling process from the bran and other substances.

The self-rising flour is ready to bake, it not being necessary to add baking powder or other ingredients.

Every barrel of Obelisk flour contains 16 coupons that are redeemable under the profit-sharing plan now being used by the Ballard company. These coupons apply on the premiums given by the company, many of which are shown in a handsome catalogue that is sent upon application. A 96-pound sack contains eight coupons, a 48-pound sack four coupons, 24-pound sack two coupons, a 12-pound sack one coupon and a 6-pound sack half coupon.

The profit-sharing coupons are redeemed by the Ballard company, which operates this as a department of its milling business. The company has found the plan of giving coupons to be redeemed by the giving of handsome premiums highly profitable, it is stated, and sales of this popular brand of flour have been greatly stimulated, it was declared by Mr. Vaughan, who is manager of the local branch of the Ballard company.

MRS. DUKE TO HAVE BOOTH AT FOOD SHOW

The culinary skill of the old south is evidenced in three new products which will be introduced to Atlanta during the week of the pure food show by Mrs. H. C. Duke, president of the Duke Manufacturing company, of Greenville, S. C., who is to be in the city for the exposition.

The three new entrants are Brunswick stew, a rich vegetable soup, and Hoppin' John.

Mrs. Duke's Brunswick stew is made from the recipe of an old master of the pit who has presided at some of the most famous barbecues in the south.

The vegetable soup is another of the products that have won Mrs. Duke the title of "the finest cook in the Carolinas."

Hoppin' John is a remarkably tasty melange of black-eyed peas, rice and the finest meats and seasonings and has been on the market just a short while, but it is already enjoying a wide popularity.

Mrs. Duke's home-made mayonnaise, the first of her products to attract widespread attention, is an uncooked mayonnaise, preserved by a special process that eliminates all artificial preservatives.

Companion confections to the famous mayonnaise are Russian dressing and relish.

SCHOOLS OBSERVE EDUCATION WEEK

Many schools throughout the state will observe American Education week beginning November 16 and many special programs have been announced for the week, according to Superintendent W. P. Martin, president of the Georgia Education association. Mr. Martin has issued a statement in which he urges all schools, civic, patriotic and educational organizations to cooperate.

"One great suggestion I have to offer is to ask all schools regardless of where they are located to carry out at least part of the educational program," Mr. Martin said. I would also like to make the ruest that all civic organizations pay special attention of education week by having their programs in accordance with the suggestions of the National Education association."

A full program for the observance has been announced for the Jefferson county schools by M. R. Little, county school superintendent, who is a member of the board of directors of the Georgia Education association. A number of prominent speakers and several feature programs have been arranged.

One of the rural schools of Rockdale county has arranged a unique program for the week, according to Miss Violet Tucker, county school superintendent. Each day the pupils of two grades will invite parents and friends to visit the school and the board of education members will invite all the people of the community to meet on Friday to discuss consolidation.

Movement Made To Rattle Ku Klux Klan Skeletons In Trial of Stephenson

Prosecution Charges Stephenson Defense Witness Kicked Out of Klan for Drunkenness.

Noblesville, Ind., November 7.—An attempt to rattle the alleged skeletons in the closets of the Indiana Ku Klux Klan was made here Saturday at the trial of D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon of the order, charged with the murder of Miss Madge Oberholtzer, of Indianapolis.

The effort was made by the prosecution during the cross-examination of Dr. Vallery Ailstock, who had given testimony which discredited the dying statement of Miss Oberholtzer that Stephenson and his aides, Earl Klenck and Earl Gentry, were responsible for her death.

Spectators Cheer.

"Oh, you were kicked out of the Ku Klux Klan for drunkenness, were you?" demanded Prosecutor Kane. The defense attorneys were on their feet instantly with loud objections; the crowd cheered and the court was thrown into confusion.

Judge Sparks concentrated his efforts to subdue the spectators who all during the trial have exhibited strong sentiment against the defendants.

Prosecutor Kane went on: "One other reason why you were put out of the klan was because you belonged to Stephenson's faction?"

This, too, precipitated a demonstration and the court threatened to clear the room unless it were stopped.

"They didn't put him out," a defense attorney shouted while the judge pounded his gavel.

Attorneys Admonished.

This development caused Judge Sparks to admonish the attorneys for both sides, saying their conduct was unprofessional. He further threatened to oust them from the case unless they handled it in a more orderly manner.

Dr. Ailstock had testified to the alleged misconduct of Miss Oberholtzer and to her infatuation with the ex-klan leader. The doctor resides in Columbus, Ind., and testified that he met Stephenson and Miss Oberholtzer there one night last winter. During their conversation, according to his testimony, Miss Oberholtzer asked him to procure some alcohol. He said she bragged of her ability to make "good cocktails" with alcohol.

"Framing Dead Woman."

Prosecutor Kane subjected the Columbus physician to a terrific examination in an attempt to prove that he was "framing a dead woman." After more than an hour's questioning he elicited the admission from Dr. Ailstock that he had discussed the case a week ago in the office of one of the defense attorneys.

Pursuing its object to prove that Miss Oberholtzer was infatuated with Stephenson, the defense produced other witnesses whose testimony corresponded with that of Dr. Ailstock.

Dr. Chester Clawson said he met Stephenson, Dr. Ailstock and Miss Oberholtzer at Columbus. He corroborated the testimony of Dr. Ailstock.

Mrs. E. B. Lambert, who resides on a farm near Laurel, Ind., testified that Stephenson and Miss Oberholtzer visited her last winter. "She seemed very fond of him," the woman said. "She fondled him constantly and called him endearing names."

Hotel Man Saw Girl.

James H. Lambert, assistant manager of the Washington hotel, Indianapolis, testifying for the defense, said he had seen Miss Oberholtzer alone in a car similar to that owned by Stephenson in front of the hotel about 11:30 o'clock the night of the alleged abduction. He was certain the woman was Miss Oberholtzer, he continued, because she called to him as he passed the car, and because he had seen her with Stephenson several times.

The testimony, which remained unshaken in the face of vigorous cross-examination, also was intended to impeach the dying statement. In it Miss Oberholtzer charged that Klenck and Gentry, with guns held against her body, prevented her from obtaining help when the machine stopped in front of the Washington hotel on its way to the depot. Stephenson formerly was a guest at the hotel.

Girl Visited Stephenson.

Dr. John Smiley, of Indianapolis, testified that Miss Oberholtzer visited Stephenson about a year ago while the latter was confined in a hospital for a nervous trouble. "She fondled him," the doctor testified. He added that "too much booze" was largely the cause of Stephenson's nervous trouble.

Miss Oberholtzer's dying statement charged that the klan leader lured her to his home last March; that, with two of his henchmen, he forced her to accompany him to a hotel in Hammond, Ind., where he attacked her. There she swallowed poison.

Physicians testifying for Stephenson Saturday declared that Miss Oberholtzer was beyond the hope of medical science when she informed Stephenson of her act, six hours later.

IF YOU GET UP NIGHTS YOU'RE OLD BEFORE YOUR TIME

Prostate and Bladder Trouble Makes Many Men Feel Twenty Years Older Than They Are.

It is said that fifty per cent of men past forty and many younger ones are victims of prostate trouble.

One of the commonest symptoms of this dangerous disease which saps vitality and makes you old before your time is the necessity of getting up several times a night.

Other symptoms are dull, draggy, aching at the base of the spine, pain in groin, burning sensation of organs, lack of vigor and frequent attacks of the blues.

But there is hope for you, no matter how old your case, from a wonderful new formula. It seemingly brings new health, vigor and freedom from these troubles to both old and young.

This wonderful treatment is known as Walker's Prostate Specific, and is prepared in convenient, pleasant tablet form. All you need do is take one tablet after each meal and the symptoms seem to vanish like magic.

To prove these statements the Walker Institute, 3542 Gateway Station, Kansas City, Mo., generously offers to send a $1 treatment under plain wrapper, postpaid and free of charge to any sufferer who will write for it. If it cures you tell your friends and pay whatever you think is fair, otherwise the loss is ours.

Remember that you are the judge, and you pay nothing now or at any time unless you wish, so send your name today before the introductory offer is withdrawn. It is good for only 10 days and guaranteed in every way.—(adv.)

IMPROVES FARM LIFE IN DEKALB COUNTY

Decatur, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Although she has been in the county but a few weeks, Miss Lurline Collier, recently appointed county demonstration agent for DeKalb, has already made her impress upon the farm life of the county by organizing the farmers' wives into various clubs for the betterment of rural life.

Previous to coming to DeKalb, Miss Collier was district supervisor of home demonstration agents of the Atlanta district, which composed 40 north Georgia counties.

The aims of Miss Collier are outlined in the following short interview with her:

"The farm home is a vital part of the farm. The business of farming, unlike banking, store keeping, and manufacturing, is a family matter. The wife is a necessary partner in the business. Heretofore much attention has been given to the farm and the farmer, but relatively little to the farmer's wife and the home.

"With the desire to extend to the farm women the most practical and acceptable assistance in promoting her work, the department of agriculture in cooperation with the State College of Agriculture and local county authorities, makes it possible for the farm woman and her daughters to have the assistance of a home demonstration agent.

"Before agriculture and rural life can reach its highest development, the farm home and the rural community must be made as efficient, as attractive, and as satisfying to the whole family as the farm is to the farmer. This calls for better rural schools, better roads, better health facilities, more modern conveniences in the home, more attention to home beautification and more time for play, for social life and hospitality among rural people."

NO NEED TO FEAR RIFF CHIEF LONGER, PETAIN DECLARES

Marseilles, France, November 7.—(AP)—"Abd-el-Krim is surrounded, and no longer need be feared," Marshal Petain, the French commander, declared today upon debarking from Morocco. "The military action is terminated, and I turn over the task for political action," he added.

HARRY SHANNON, ESCAPED FEDERAL CONVICT, CAUGHT

Harry Shannon, who escaped from honor farm No. 2, of the Atlanta federal penitentiary about two weeks ago, was captured Saturday in Okmulgee, Okla., it was announced in dispatches reaching prison authorities. He will be returned to the penitentiary at once.

Shannon left the honor farm where he was working as a trusty. He lost all his good time, which amounted to about nine months. His term would have expired in March, but now he will have to serve all the good time he would have been allowed, and thus will not be released until late next fall.

AUTO ACCESSORIES VALUED AT $100,000 STOLEN FROM FORD

Buffalo, N. Y., November 7.—(AP)—The value of auto accessories stolen from the Buffalo branch of the Ford Motor company will probably amount to $100,000 instead of the $30,000 originally estimated.

Police report that nearly 50 Ford employees have admitted culpability.

Many of the men were permitted to retain their jobs on their promises to reform. Evidence against dealers suspected of receiving stolen good will be presented to the grand jury.

MAJOR M'TEER DIES OF DOUBLE PNEUMONIA

Maryville, Tenn., November 7.—(AP)—Major William A. McTeer, oldest member of the board of directors of Maryville college, and a member of the Blount county bar, died today at his home here, after a brief illness of double pneumonia.

Major McTeer was 82 years old. He was a Confederate veteran, having served in the Third Tennessee cavalry under Colonel J. B. Minnis and General Joseph Hooper. Following the war between the states, he served 10 years as circuit court clerk. While attending to his office, he studied law and was admitted to the bar. Major McTeer assisted in organizing the Bank of Maryville and served 10 years as its president. He was a director of the bank and also of Maryville college, having served continuously in the latter capacity for 53 years.

GEORGIA ALUMNI MEETS UPON NEXT THURSDAY

Athens, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—On Thursday, November 12, the University of Georgia alumni in all states will observe their first University day. Thursday evening members everywhere will meet around the banquet table. This is to become an annual event. In the future it will be known as "Founders day." The celebration is to take place on a date significant to the University of Georgia.

Plans and definite arrangements for dinners have already been made in 15 leading Georgia cities, also in New York city and Washington, D. C.

Governor Clifford Walker has been requested to issue a proclamation designating November 12, 1925, as University of Georgia day. It is expected the proclamation will be issued Monday or Tuesday.

ELECTION CALLED IN NORTH DAKOTA

Mrs. W. L. Carson Who Shot Boarder Faces Trial Soon

Marietta, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Public interest is centering around the trial here of Mrs. W. L. Carson, Cobb county woman who shot and killed Thomas Brown, Jr., at her home on Oakdale road on the night of October 4. While the November term of superior court convenes Monday, it is not thought likely that Mrs. Carson will stand trial until the second week of the court. She is now in the Marietta jail and maintains that same degree of coolness exhibited at the time of her arrest. A Cobb county grand jury indicted her for murder in the first degree.

Mrs. Carson, according to the story told to local deputies who arrested her, was in the act of preparing breakfast when young Brown, a boarder at her home, menaced her life, whereupon she seized a pistol and fired once, killing Brown almost instantly.

SOCIAL CIRCLE U. D. C. CHAPTER TO SELL COINS

Monroe, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Resolutions dissenting from the action of the Georgia division of United Daughters of the Confederacy in refusing to take part in the coin sale campaign and refusing to indorse the Stone Mountain memorial were unanimously adopted Thursday afternoon by the James M. Gresham chapter of U. D. C., at Social Circle, Ga. The chapter pledged its endeavors to accomplish the sale of all coins allotted to its territory.

WALKER TO SEE COHEN IN AL SMITH'S INTEREST

New York, November 7.—(Special.) James J. Walker, mayor-elect of New York, and, next to Governor Smith, Tammany's outstanding political figure, set forth today on a pilgrimage which may be fraught with political consequences of first importance to the followers of Governor Smith and the democratic party. He has gone as Tammany's envoy to establish a better understanding of the organization among anti-Tammany democrats of the south.

Senator Walker will make a two or three days' visit in Atlanta, in the native state and rallying center of the dry McAdoo democrats in the east. He will be the guest of Major John S. Cohen, democratic national committeeman from Georgia, who was field marshal of the McAdoo delegation from Georgia at last year's democratic national convention in Madison Square garden.

The visit was arranged by Major Cohen in the midst of the democratic primary fight.

With the New York city election out of the way, Senator Walker, acting on the suggestion of friends, and apparently with the full approval of Governor Smith, seized eagerly upon the opportunity of visiting the home of the klan and the McAdoo supporters, in the hope that he might be able, under the auspices of Major Cohen, to modify some preconceived ideas that Governor Smith and his political advisers believe are held by Georgia democrats in relation to Tammany hall and its candidates.

2 BRITISH CRUISERS WILL VISIT MOBILE

Mobile, Ala., November 7.—(AP)—Two powerful British cruisers, the H. M. S. Constance and the Curlew, will pay an official visit to Mobile on February 25 for the stay of two days, it was learned today. The cruisers are attached to the North Atlantic and West Indies squadron. The visit to Mobile, it is understood, will be the only one which will be made to a gulf port during the cruise of the two war vessels.

Mystery Murder Probers Puzzled By Footprints

New York, November 7.—Footprints in the mud and on a pair of patent leather shoes, the soles of the shoe coinciding with the footprints, are elements which have entered the mysterious murder of John Clark, in Hillside, N. J., last Monday night.

John Cowen, salesman and alleged lover of Clark's wife, is charged with the murder. The mud-stained shoes were found in Cowen's room and he admitted ownership, but declared that the condition of the shoe was the result of walking through soggy ground last Sunday night. The footprints, however, were found near the body of Clark.

A special session of the grand jury will be called for Monday when the prosecutor will ask for Cowen's indictment.

Mrs. Clark, a beautiful woman, is being held as material witness under $2,000 cash bail. Through her attorney, she made public a statement in which she denied intimacy with Cowen. She declares, in this statement, that she never considered Cowen more than a friend and that he "spent more time with my husband and my mother than he did with me."

Where joy-full life Reigns all the year!

If you want to live longer, keep well, and play out-of-doors the year around, move to Coral Gables, in the land of southern Florida—the romance land where tropic sunshine smiles.

In the unequaled climate of this—the finest suburban city of the Miami district—families from every section of the country are finding living conditions ideal. Here they are buying land and building homes amid palm-shaded gardens—living lives that they did not believe existed beyond the covers of a South Sea romance. Here they are living in the healthful, zestful open air. There are swimming, golfing, riding, whenever the will, and not the weather, decrees!

Dividends in Health and Cash

Buying and building in Coral Gables is combining the rich pleasures of life in the tropics with the making of a gilt-edge investment. Coral Gables is a marvelous city of homes and gardens, patios and plazas, done in the restful grandeur of old Spain. "Castles in Spain" are actual here. And these very homes, and the miles of modern roads, and the up-to-date improvements, are convincing proof that Coral Gables is a very real and money-making investment. Its future is assured by the prosperity and tremendous growth of the entire Miami district. Coral Gables is to the building of the South what California was to the building of the West.

Some of the shrewdest business men of our time endorse Florida—Arthur Brisbane, B. C. Forbes, Edmunds, Untermeyer, Livermore and Babson.

Now—is the Time to Invest

Coral Gables is an investment for those who believe in playing safe. It is no dream of what may happen. Coral Gables has happened. It is very real—an unprecedented opportunity for home-seekers and investors. A living, eager city built by shrewd men and populated by people of every class.

BECKER NAMED IN AUTO FIRM

Effective November 1, the firm name of J. W. Goldsmith, Jr.-Grant company, for years Atlanta distributors and dealers for Hudson and Essex motor cars, was changed to Goldsmith-Becker company. This was announced Monday by J. W. Goldsmith, Jr., president and founder of the new company.

The new company name is occasioned by the fact that C. H. Becker, who for two years has been vice president and general manager of the organization, has in that time acquired sufficient stock in the company to give him official designation as a member of the firm.

Mr. Becker is one of Atlanta's best-known executives in the automotive distributing industry and came here from Detroit, where he was connected in responsible capacities with the Chalmers Motor Car company. His stride to the front in social, civic and business affairs has been rapid since coming to Atlanta.

The Goldsmith-Becker company started the month under its new title with one of the finest dealer organizations in the entire south selling Hudson and Essex cars at a rate never before approached in the history of the company. A large share of the credit for the building up of this dealer body must be given directly to Mr. Becker as his activities in the company are largely centered about the wholesale department and he has had personal contact with out-of-town business since his appointment as vice president and general manager of the firm.

J. W. Goldsmith, Jr., will continue as president of the reorganized company and Mr. Becker will retain his title of vice president and general manager. There will be no change in policy or personnel.

REMARKABLE GROWTH OF GRAHAM BROTHERS

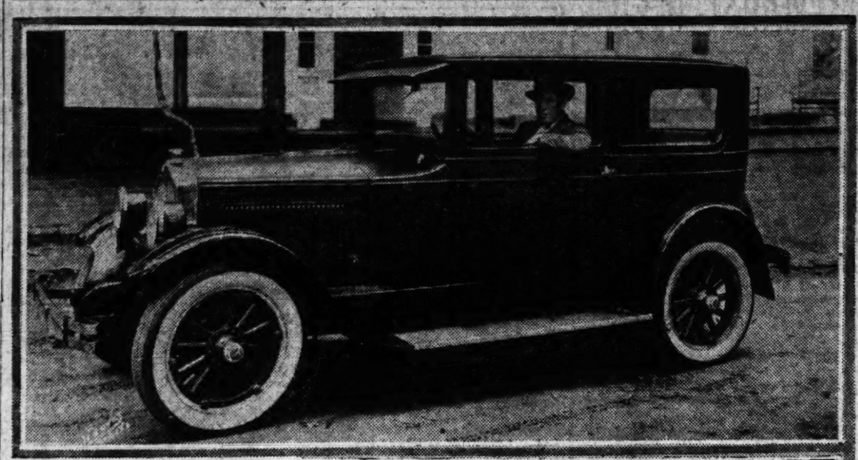

Graham Brothers' production of motor trucks for the single month of September, 1925, according to official figures, was 171 per cent of their production for the entire year of 1921.

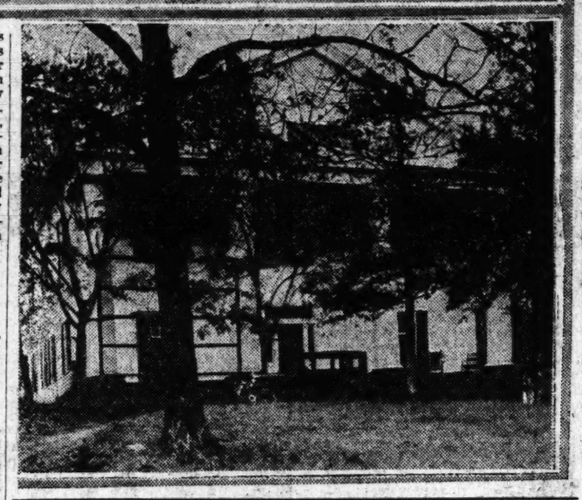

With the combined output of their four large factories located at Detroit, Evansville, Stockton, California and Toronto, Ontario, Graham Brothers, a division of Dodge Brothers, Inc., and now the largest exclusive manufacturers of motor trucks, month by month and week by week are shattering all their previous production records.

Graham Brothers' production for the first nine months of this year exceeded that for 1924 by 128 per cent and exceeded the 1923 figures by 248 per cent.

"This progress is not surprising to owners of Graham Brothers trucks," says F. E. Moffett, of F. E. Moffett, Inc., local Dodge Brothers' dealer, "because they know the satisfactory service these trucks give, and appreciate their unusually low cost of operation."

Two Prides of Roswell, Ga.

The little town of Roswell, Ga., is justly proud of this man and this home. Above is Nap Rucker, former big league pitcher for the Brooklyn Nationals, and is seen in his new Buick Sedan, delivered to him by D. C. Black, local Buick distributor, while below is shown the famous Bulloch hall, built by Major J. S. Bulloch in 1840, "long before Atlanta was ever thought of." It is the home of the mother of late President Roosevelt and is one of the south's real historic show places and at the present time is owned by Mrs. J. B. Wing, who is an aunt of Mrs. Nap Rucker.

MARMON INTRODUCES STYLE DEPARTMENT

Nordyke & Marmon company announces the establishment of a "quality and style department," under the management of A. J. Rogers, recently appointed assistant to the vice president. The new department, an innovation for the Marmon company, will be a link between the sales and manufacturing departments to insure keeping the Marmon product up to a maximum degree of perfection.

Mr. Rogers is well known in the automobile trade, having been for some years advertising manager of the Nordyke & Marmon company and more recently assistant sales manager. He is well equipped for his new duties as a result of his experience in practically every branch of sales activity and his acquaintance with manufacturing problems.

"In manufacturing Marmon cars, we constantly have before us the customer's viewpoint," said H. L. Purdy, vice president and assistant general manager, in announcing the new department and the promotion of Mr. Rogers. "We are serving a discriminating class of users and we must be on the alert constantly to keep our product fresh and attractive in appearance and appointments and increasingly satisfactory in operation.

"In creating a new department with Mr. Rogers in charge, we are forging a link between sales and manufacturing which will coordinate the efforts of the two branches more closely on the vital necessity of constantly pleasing the buyers. This department will not only receive suggestions and criticisms, but will give constant close attention to new features with the idea of incorporating them to increase the desirability of the product."

NEW ALLOY ALUMINUM FOR CADILLAC BEARINGS

A new type of aluminum alloy casting for bearing caps, formerly used only in aviation engines, is now used by the Cadillac Motor Car company on the three main bearing caps of its crankshaft.

Former practice was to use an alloy of aluminum with copper, which had the required stiffness, but needed to be reinforced with a steel plate. In the new practice, a quality of aluminum known as Y-metal, with a mixture of nickel, copper and magnesium, is cast in a steel die instead of in sand, a far more accurate method. Afterwards it is heat-treated. In this process the caps are cast much closer to size, are more uniform and require less finishing, thereby reducing cost.

"Only within the last five or six years has the heat-treating of aluminum, the same as of steel, become a production method and it is not yet in general use," according to L. A. Danse, Cadillac metallurgist. "With the process used in our bearing caps it is possible to obtain a breaking strength up to 45,000 pounds per square inch.

"The process," he continues, "is one of the methods by which Cadillac has been able to produce the new car with better quality and less cost."

The metallurgical department of the Cadillac Motor Car company is a great laboratory in which tests are made of all materials used in the car and in which new and improved classes of metal are discovered for use.

Today in the new Cadillac foundries even the sand is carefully analyzed. Five different kinds of sand are required for work in the iron, aluminum, bronze and brass foundries. Even the analysis of the sand and control of its quality has a vital effect upon the quality of the c ting and in the amount of subsequent work required in the manufacturing processes.

AKRONITES TO JOIN LIBERIA RUBBER COLONY

Announcement of definite plans for Akron's Liberian expedition probably will follow Harvey Firestone's return to Akron Sunday night or Monday.

Akron officials of the Firestone Tire and Rubber company, which is backing the expedition in its effort to produce rubber for American manufacturers, have been asked by Mr. Firestone to withhold announcement of definite plans until his arrival.

Mr. Firestone this week announced in New York that papers had been signed by officials of the Liberian republic leasing to Firestone interests for 99 years 1,000,000 acres of land for development of rubber plantations.

The deal has been hanging fire for months since Firestone first announced his intention of attempting crude rubber production by American interests on foreign soil.

His interest in the raw rubber production game came as a result of what Americans have termed exorbitant prices exacted by British interests under the Stevenson act limiting exports and fixing prices.

Earlier reports from Mr. Firestone and others have indicated that several hundred men will be sent to Liberia to organize the Firestone plantations for rubber production.

It is believed that they will begin leaving in November, or at least by January 1, for the picturesque, wild bit of country on the African west coast, a tropical land whose steep inland hills are heavily wooded, and which are peopled by primitive tribes, a few of whom still practice cannibalism.

Despite the comparatively wild nature of the country, however, the trip is appealing to the lure of adventure of many and new applications for the journey are flooding into the Firestone offices daily.

If after being put through several tests, including a thorough physical examination, the applicants are deemed satisfactory, they are requested to report to the Firestone company for a few weeks hectic preparations and training.

According to plans of Mr. Firestone, the "pioneers" who sail for Liberia next month will be just the nucleus of a large colony of American rubber workers who will leave from time to time.

These workers will include doctors, sanitary engineers, civil and mechanical engineers, architects, builders, foresters and soil experts who will develop the land.

Liberia is described as abounding in the most luxuriant of all west African verdure. The country in general is a farm paradise. Some of the cultivated trees and plants of importance are rubber, the orange tree, lime, cocoa, coffee, pineapple, sour pop, ginger, papaw, alligator apples, pear, okra, cotton, indigo, sweet potatoes, chillie, breadfruit, maize, sorghum, sugar cane, rice, gourds, pumpkins, cabbages and onions.

In addition to Liberia's great vegetable wealth, the country is described as being rich in mineral deposits of diamonds and gold.

The big difficulty in developing these mines heretofore has been the fact that there are no roads running from the tangled jungles of the interior to the coast.

With the construction of transportation facilities it will be possible to tap the wealth of the interior.

This move by the Firestone interests will be welcome news to the tire manufacturers of America who for the past several months have been forced by the British laws to pay exorbitant prices for crude rubber. Many price raises by this branch of the automobile industry have already been made and according to officials of the different tire companies is just the beginning and shows the rubber industry the importance that is attached to this expedition.

Champion Plugs Win Again—Pilot Nears Record

When Bob McDonough, youthful racing pilot, flashed under the wire a winner in the 250-mile A. A. A. race at Laurel, Md., October 28, in the phenomenal average of 126.30 miles an hour, he thoroughly established himself as one of the year's newcomers in the racing field who must be ranked among the speedway's greatest stars. He beat Peter de Paolo, the year's outstanding sensation, to the finish line by 200 yards. Valve trouble 25 miles from the finish probably prevented a new world's speedway record.

McDonough covered the distance without a stop, hanging up several new speed records as he gained a 2½-mile lead on de Paolo early in the race.

The winner and every other car in the race, save one, used Champion spark plugs as usual, according to checkings by the Champion Spark Plug company. It was the 28th Champion victory in major speed and endurance contests the world over in two years. Not a single Champion was changed during the entire race.

De Paolo's inability to get sufficient speed from his car to surpass McDonough made the race a question of how fast a speed the latter could set until valve trouble caused his engine to flutter at 225 miles. Backfiring and sputtering, it regained power just in time to head the flying Italian to the checkered flag. The youngster's pace was too severe for the cars of every other entrant. Several of the better known pilots, including Hartz, Bennett Hill, Elliott and Duray, did not fnish.

McDonough, though missing the world record, held by Milton, set a new track mark and avenged himself on de Paolo for his victory following a spirited clash in Laurel's opening race last July.

Champions also added another record to their long string when Frank Lockhart officially broke the world's dirt track mark at Bakersfield, Cal., driving a mile in 39.2 seconds, an average of 91.9 miles an hour.

DROUTH COMMITTEE WILL MEET TUESDAY

A meeting of the state-wide drouth committee, appointed by Governor Walker to investigate conditions in the drouth-stricken counties of the state, has been called for 10 o'clock Tuesday morning at the Georgian hotel in Athens, it was announced Saturday.

The governor expects to be present. He is scheduled to speak before the Walker county superior court in LaFayette on Monday and will go to Athens from there.

Seventeen Georgians are members of the drouth committee. The meeting Tuesday will be the first since appointment of the committee and will be presided over by Professor J. Phil Campbell, of Athens.

TEACHER CRITICIZES GEORGIA TRAIN DELAYS

Miss Fannie Lee Leverette, school teacher, has written to the Georgia public service commission about poor schedules observed by trains on the Camak and Macon division of the Georgia railroad.

Miss Leverette teaches in Thomson, Ga., while her home is in Eatonton, thus necessitating use of this line. She says that trains always are late leaving Camak and that the delay is so serious that she has seen passengers leaving the train to walk the track.

FRENCH OBJECT TO DUNDEE-MESCART BOUT

The French Boxing Federation has instructed Edouard Mascart to refrain from meeting Johnny Dundee, the former world's featherweight champion, in the ring while in the United States, under penalty of instant disqualification in France. Dundee was suspended indefinitely by the French federation when he sailed for America without fulfilling a contract to box Fred Bretonnel.

Davis Will Speak.

B. J. Davis, national republican committeeman from Georgia, will address a mass meeting at the Paramount theater, Auburn avenue, Sunday, November 15, at 3:30 o'clock, under auspices of the Young Men's Business club.

Service Means Supremacy

A single hit may decide a world's series. An unexpected swell may snatch victory from the leading boat.

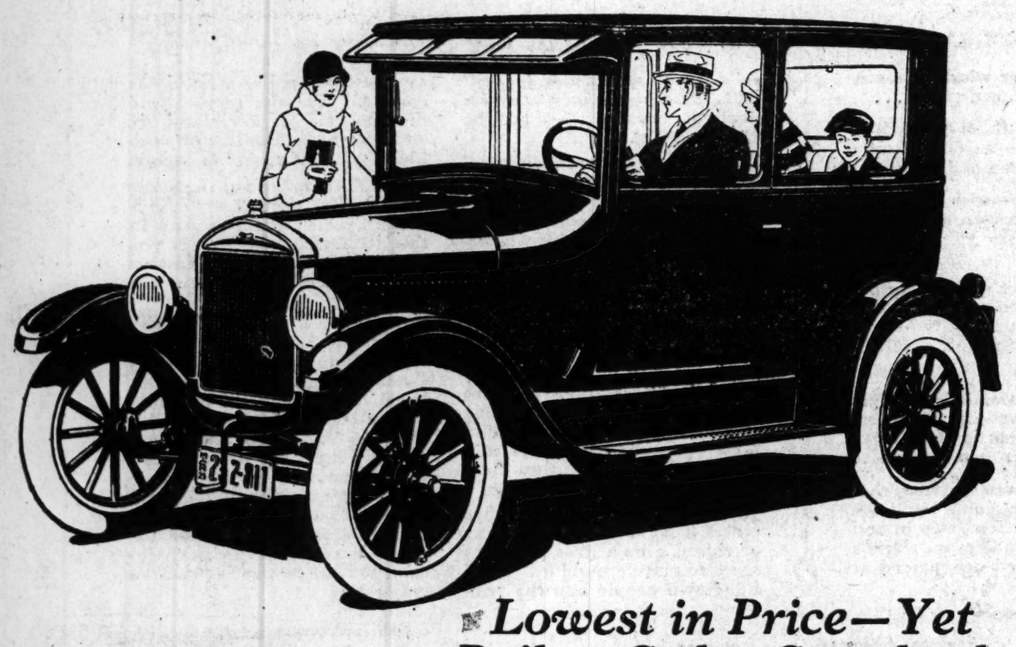

But truck supremacy is won on a more substantial issue — on the long, hard pull where minutes mean little and years mean all.

Graham Brothers won world supremacy among exclusive motor truck manufacturers because Graham Brothers Trucks have stood the test of exacting service in every line of business —and because they are priced at a figure that is too attractive to be overlooked.

WHY SHOULD ALL CARS BE BLACK, ASKS MAKER

"Why should all automobiles be black?" is the query of H. H. Franklin. "At least this is the impression made by all the dark-colored cars which are so much in preponderance that other colors do not seem to be in evidence at all."

"Since color is fundamentally an expression of feeling, it is hard to believe that people are in the mood which this drab display is advertising far and wide.

"There are signs that the old order is about to change and that people of individuality are not going to be content to be labeled by the mass. Even conservative people are today interested in bright and lively shades, a fact which every tailor and modiste will confirm. This reflection of the up-and-going spirit appears everywhere. In automobiles enough has already happened to define lighter and more interesting colors as one of the pronounced trends.

"This self-expression which people are seeking in their motor cars has for months crowded the capacity of our painting department. Today there is actual over-demand for this class of work.

"It is a scientific fact that different colors produce different reactions, certain effects being depressing, others restful, and other enlivening. The lighter shades carry the greatest interest and attention qualities and are, therefore, fast becoming the most popular. With more and more motor cars on the road every day, personal satisfaction in ownership is bound to make an increasing factor of pleasing colors."

SALES CONGRESS WEEK OUTSTANDING EVENT

The National Sales congress, held in Atlanta the afternoon of Tuesday, November 3, at the auditorium of Atlanta Woman's club, under auspices of the National Automobile Dealers' association and the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, in cooperation with the Atlanta Automobile association, proved one of the outstanding events in the history of the industry in this section. Nearly 300 local and out-of-town dealers, coming from a distance, were in attendance, and intense interest was manifested by everyone throughout the business session, conducted from 1 p. m., to 5 p. m., Tuesday afternoon. The speakers whose talks attracted the greatest attention at the session were A. R. Kroh, sales promotion advisor, National Automobile Dealers' association, and C. D. Bullock, another expert with the same organization. Both men proved masters in their line, and every phase of the merchandising end of the automobile business was emphasized in a way that held the interest of everyone throughout. Every point brought out by the speakers was illustrated by some practical example taken from actual business experience, and it is almost impossible to calculate what the session was actually worth in dollars and cents. Every minute was crammed full of business-building ideas, either presenting a new thought or an old thought in a new way. Upon the conclusion of the session it was unanimously voted to request the National Automobile Dealers' association and the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce to stage another sales congress here within the next six months, and to make these affairs regular semi-annual events.

Following the business session, a large number of the dealers assembled at the Capital City club in the evening at 7 p. m., to attend a dinner given in honor of the visitors. Mr. Kroh and Mr. Bullock, on behalf of the visitors, acknowledged their appreciation of the splendid reception given them by the dealers in this section, and further expressed the desire to make a return call to this section at the earliest practicable moment.

HUNTSVILLE BAPTISTS PLAN NEW CHURCH

Huntsville, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—The First Baptist church congregation has instructed the architects of the new $100,000 church building to prepare plans for the contractors and bids for construction will be opened on December 8, it was announced today.

The finances have been arranged, according to the executive finance committee and there will be no hitch in the proceedings from now on.

'Health Week' Lectures.

Dr. Peter Lersch, of New York city, lecturer on physical culture, assisted by Edmund Simensen, who has won many prizes for physical perfection, will speak at the Lions and Exchange clubs Tuesday and Thursday and at the Junior Chamber of Commerce on Monday and Thursday of "Health week," beginning November 16. Mayor Sims has issued a proclamaiton on "Health week."

New Line Eight 'Play Boy' Roadster by Jordan

Built on an extreme stream line and finished in beautiful sport colors. This new "Play Boy" roadster, one of the Jordan company's latest models, was put on display during the past week in the showrooms of the Jordan Company of Georgia, 29 East North avenue, local distributors.

HUPP EIGHT BEATS FASTEST TRAIN'S TIME

James J. Williams, of Rochester, N. Y., set what is believed to be a new motor car speed and endurance record when he piloted a Hupmobile eight standard stock touring car from that city to Miami, Fla., 1,686 miles, in 37 1-2 hours elapsed driving time. This is an average of 44.96 miles an hour.

The record eclipses that of the fastest limited trains from any point along the North Atlantic coast to Miami by several hours. Eight states and the District of Columbia were traversed. The run necessitated passing through the traffic of such cities as Williamsport and Harrisburg, Pa.; Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Va.; Charlotte, N. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Augusta, Ga., and Jacksonville, Florida.

The run was the second record-breaking cross-country test of a Hupmobile eight within recent weeks. On September 20 and 21, T. W. Campbell, Hupmobile distributor at Hartford, Conn., and C. E. Emery, of his organization, drove a standard stock sedan bearing factory serial number E-961, from Hartford to Windsor, Ont., 866 miles, in 19 hours and 20 minutes elapsed time, averaging 44.79 miles an hour.

The log of Mr. Williams' trip illustrates the remarkable trainlike speed schedule that was made. An average of 43 miles an hour was made during the first eight hours; a 42.5 mile average was made the following five and one-half hours; 45.1 during the next seven hours; 49.1 for the next seven hours; 45.7 for the next seven hours and 42.7 during the last three hours. The highest speed average was between Columbia, S. C., and Jacksonville.

"I drove it continuously at speeds of from 50 to 60 miles an hour," said Mr. Williams. "Whenever opportunity presented itself faster time was made. This happened on numerous occasions during daylight hours when the road was clear. At those times the speedometer went past the 75-mile mark often.

"The hood was raised only once—when the oil was changed. No other part of the car was even touched. It was given only a superficial inspection before leaving Rochester. During the time it was used as my personal car nothing was done to it except a general tightening and cleaning."

RAILROAD EXTENSION INTERESTS EUFAULA

Eufaula, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—Great interest is manifest here over the proposed extension of the road from Panama City, Fla., to Opelika, Atlanta and St. Andrews Bay railka, Ala., or Columbus, Ga. It is said that engineers will begin surveying a route within the next few days.

If the road is built to either Opelika or Columbus, the line will pass through Eufaula, local business men say.

WORLD WAR PAGEANT PLANNED AT BENNING

Columbus, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Arrangements for the armistice day presentation of the famous world war pageant to be given in the Doughboy stadium at Fort Benning have been progressing rapidly and a large crowd is assured.

In order that those Columbus residents who have been the most loyal supporters of the Infantry school and who have the keenest tangible interest in such a production may not be crowded, special invitations are being mailed.

NEW GENERAL MOTORS CAR TO BE A BIG SIX

The new General Motors car to be produced by the Oakland Motor Car company as an addition to the line, and a companion to the Oakland Six will also be a six cylinder automobile and place this company among those now building two completely different lines of six-cylinder cars.

This announcement confirms rumors which have been guessed rather aptly that the new car would also be a "six," based on the current trend of popular demand for this type of car and the fact that the Oakland Motor Car company was one of the first builders of six-cylinder motor cars in America and also one of the most successful.

How far the trend has gone in this direction may be gauged by the fact that a large majority of all motor car companies in this country produce one or more cars in the six-cylinder field.

This trend has been particularly noticeable during the last year, when a number of prominent companies added a "six" to their line for "fours" and some companies changed from the "four" to the "six." In the low-priced six-cylinder field the development has been particularly rapid.

All the research, designing and engineering facilities of the General Motors corporation and the Oakland Motor Car company, which has built high grade six-cylinder cars continuously since 1913, are being devoted to the building of this new car.

For several months the new sixes have been undergoing every possible kind of test at the General Motors proving grounds at Milford, Mich., and pronounced O. K., and now over $3,000,000 is being invested in new equipment for the expanding capacity of the Oakland factories, both to increase the production of the Oakland Six and prepare for the new car which will be produced in connection with it.

ASSOCIATION PLANS GREATEST MEETING

Plans are being rapidly whipped into shape for the greatest annual meeting and celebration ever staged by the Atlanta Automobile association, the evening of December 7, E. G. Beaudry, general chairman on arrangements, is calling a meeting of his special committee for next Wednesday in order to check up on plans already formulated for the meeting, and to formulate additional plans. Due to the increase in membership, which is the largest in its history, the association found it necessary to secure a larger place in which to hold the meeting than in former years, and this year the meeting will be staged at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel.

As in former years, a short business session will be held at 6:30 p. m., immediately preceding the celebration, at which time the president will render his annual report, and the nominating committee, consisting of the past presidents of the association, will make their recommendations for officers for the ensuing year, which officers will be elected at the meeting. The officers to be elected are president, first vice president, honorary secretary, honorary treasurer, and four official members of the board of directors.

Following the business session, the members and guests will repair to the ball room, where an elaborate course dinner will be served, accompanied by an entertainment. By far the outstanding feature of the annual meetings is the unusual and high-class entertainment staged during and following the dinner. No effort and expense are being spared this year to present to the meeting the most gorgeous, spectacular, and high-class entertainment features it is possible to secure. A special committee has this one feature in charge, and they have passed the word along that the members may expect something unusual and novel—something that will satisfy the most discriminating.

The retiring officers of the association are: T. K. Johnson, president; C. M. LeRoux, first vice president; R. N. Reed, second vice president; C. W. Dobbs, third vice president; F. L. Brandes, fourth vice president; J. B. Moore, fifth vice president; J. M. Becker, honorary secretary, and E. G. Beaudry, honorary treasurer.

PRICES REDUCED ON NEW NASH MODELS

The Nash Motors company has announced price reductions ranging up to $300 on the advanced six and special six lines. The new low prices are effective November 1. No change has been made in the Nash models themselves and the character and quality of the cars remain exactly as before. This sweeping Nash cut in prices is, in effect, a double reduction, according to E. H. McCarty, general salesmanager of the Nash Motors company. "When the new Nash models were nationally introduced July 23," says Mr. McCarty, "they presented new and original body designs, far-reaching improvements in construction and many refinements in engineering and equipment, all of which entailed large increases in manufacturing cost. If Nash sales and production had not been smashing all records for volume at that time we would certainly have been compelled to increase prices materially. But Nash prices were held at the same figure and the response on the part of the public to this offering of greater value and greater quality was instantaneous and country-wide. In the three months' period since national Nash inaugural day, July 23, when these new cars were first placed on display, sales have more than equaled one-half the sales for the entire year of 1924, which was a banner year for Nash. So that it is now possible for us to make these skeeping reductions on the advanced six and special six lines and thus pass on the earned benefits of record-breaking production to buyers.

"There has been no cheapening of materials, construction or manufacturing. The same high standards of quality and workmanship that have earned a world-wide reputation for C. W. Nash as a builder of high-grade cars are strictly maintained. And the aim of the Nash Motors company to continually give greater quality and greater value in its product is now attained in higher degree than ever before. Unquestionably this present series of advanced six and special six models are the finest cars that have ever borne the Nash name-plate. And the soaring demand from all sections of the world is the best evidence of that."

Big Wide Windows—more than 20 square feet of window space—longer, deeper windows mean clear, uninterrupted vision . . .

New Cowl Ventilator—a modern big-car feature—a comfort only more costly automobiles give . . .

Triplex Springs—with 30 inches more spring-base on a 100-inch wheelbase—easier riding, easier driving . . .

A 27-horsepower engine—sturdy, reliable—fast on the straightaways, great on the hills—extraordinary economy on gasoline and oil . . .

Sliding Gear Transmission—three-speed, selective—at the lowest price at which you can have a car with this modern transmission . . .

. . . If you've been thinking that only one maker could build the car you could afford, step in and see this Overland Sedan. Here's a modern closed car, priced at only $595!

"a magnificent big Six—for only $895!"

—"a car of spectacular beauty" with "an engineering masterpiece under the hood of it"—that's the Overland Six . . .

"An exquisite color combination"—it takes a woman to tell it—for "exquisite" is the only term that comes anywhere nearly describing the strikingly attractive color-ensemble of this handsome big automobile—Two beautifully blended tones of grey, topped off in glistening jet-black, a double beading all around the waist-line—"The way they gather around it, and their open admiration—it is almost embarrassing," another woman-owner exclaims. Nothing so attracts the man-or-woman-in-the-street as something distinctly out-of-the-ordinary in an automobile!

"It's all that inside room that makes a hit with me"—Driving or riding, a man likes plenty of space to move around in. Put 5 full-grown people into the ordinary Sedan and somebody is crowded. Put the same 5 into this spacious big Overland Six and everybody feels like he's riding in a 7-passenger limousine!

"Over 5300 miles and the motor hasn't missed a shot"—No car is better than its engine. And in this 38 horsepower big Six you have an engine as nearly flawless as automotive engineering can make it.

All controls centered at the driver's finger tips . . . One piece windshield . . . Efficient windshield wiper . . . Sun visor . . . Legal head lamps . . . Fisk full-size balloon tires . . . Long, flexible Chrome Vanadium Springs especially built for balloon tire equipment . . . every last feature and convenience . . . Do you wonder it has taken the factory 9 months to catch up on production when such a magnificently-equipped car as this is priced at only $895!

Easy terms . . . a small amount down . . . 52 weeks for the balance.

Important Resolutions Passed By Atlanta P.-T. A. Council

At a meeting of the Atlanta P.-T. A. council Thursday afternoon resolutions were passed indorsing the urging of every member of city council to vote for the passage of a resolution barring the sale of salacious literature in the city of Atlanta. At the meeting Thursday a resolution was adopted to indorse and approve the action of the Georgia State P.-T. A. executive board in requesting the governor to call an extra session of the legislature for the consideration of educational bonds.

The resolutions were presented by Mrs. W. A. Foster, council chairman of resolutions, and were unanimously passed by the council over which Mrs. George W. Howsmon, president, presided.

Chairmen Report.

The reports of council chairmen were an interesting feature of the meeting. Mrs. Raymond Wolfe, safety chairman, stated that a safety council would be established in all schools, beginning with grammar schools.

Mrs. George Price, chairman of children's books, asked the cooperation of all chairmen and requested the mothers to meet Miss Cox of the Carnegie library for help in books.

Miss May Walker, illiteracy chairman, reported this work progressing and that W. A. Sutton was assisting in the securing of a list of all illiterates.

Mrs. J. C. Mellichamp, citizenship chairman, requested all P.-T. associations to feature citizenship in their programs. She stated that a meeting of all citizenship chairmen would be held Thursday, November 12, at her home, 595 Piedmont avenue.

Mrs. R. E. Colby, special class chairman, reported the progress of this work which occupies an important place on the council program.

Mrs. Colby reported the associations that were contributing to the support of a nurse for the special classes in the city schools.

Press Chairmen Meeting.

Mrs. C. E. Betts, publicit chairman, announced a meeting of all press chairmen of the P.-T. associations for Tuesday morning, November 10, at 11 o'clock on the second floor of the Chamber of Commerce building. Miss Mildred Cabaniss, of the Journal, and Mrs. John T. Toler, of The Constitution, will address the meeting, giving helpful suggestions to the chairmen for the writing of their publicity.

Mrs. J. C. Malone, pre-school age chairman, explained the nutrition classes being held at the junior high schools. She requested each president to send five representatives. She also announced a luncheon for Wednesday at 12 o'clock at the Henry Grady hotel.

Mrs. C. C. Whitaker, juvenile protection, announced a meeting of this committee for November 13 at 10:30 o'clock in the Chamber of Commerce building.

Other chairmen making reports were Mrs. C. D. Tebo, scrap book; Mrs. John L. McCord, magazine; Mrs. John W. Lloyd, motion picture; Mrs. A. D. Gregory, program; Mrs. Shell, constitution and by-laws.

Mrs. Charles E. Robertson, of New York, formerly of this city where she was actively identified with P.-T. A. work, was a prominent guest attending the meeting and was introduced to the assemblage.

The observance of Arbor day, December 4, was stressed by Mrs. Howsmon.

The council voted that a letter be written to Commissioner Fort Land, of the Georgia state educational department, indorsing an extension of the consolidated school system.

James L. Key P.-T. A. Reports Activities.

The James L. Key school held its monthly meeting Wednesday at the school building. The feature of the afternoon was a talk by Miss Helen Bagby on the "Camp Fire Girls." It was very interesting and inspiting to hear about the beautiful symbol of each bead that is on the girls' costumes, also of the wonderful work the organization is doing. Two groups were formed with girls of the age 11 and over.

A beautiful affair was a school benefit bridge given by Mrs. Ben Warren at her home on Atlanta avenue.

Mrs. Johnson gave an urgent plea for the mothers to cooperate with the school in making the attendance 100 per cent. An interesting report was given on lunch room, which is exclusively operated by the P.-T. A. A hot plate is served with a variety of three different nourishing foods for the price of 10 cents. Hot soup and cocoa is also sold at a moderate cost. In this way the P.-T. A. is also taking care of the undernourished children.

Mrs. Rowerden, in her report, told of the wonderful work that she is doing with the hope chest. Every child is kept under close observance and seen that they are warmly clothed. In one instance the hope chest fund supplied one family with food and fuel. Mrs. S. Rosenberg was appointed publicity chairman.

Mrs. Crymes announced that the James L. Key school sent more than their quota to the nutrition classes held at the Girls' High school.

The meeting adjourned to the lunch room, where Mrs. Baker presided as chairman of the refreshment committee.

Calhoun P.-T. A. Appoints Chairmen.

The Parent-Teacher association of Calhoun school held its monthly meeting Thursday with a large crowd present. Mrs. J. Harris, the president, called the meeting to order and after the prayer led by Mrs. J. J. Brown the business of the association was taken up. The following chairmen were named and introduced:

Ways and means, Miss Lillie Weems; publicity, Miss Julia Chapman; juvenile protection, Mrs. E. A. Haley; better films, Mrs. J. W. Lloyd; welfare, Mrs. C. H. Williamson; illiteracy, Mrs. E. Pierce Wood; citizenship, Mrs. T. Q. Cason; pre-school, Mrs. C. R. Hartsfield; special class, Mrs. W. B. Hohnes; grounds, Mrs. A. P. Tripod; hospitality, Mrs. J. B. Wilbanks.

A talk was given the association by Miss Alexander, head of the public nurses. Many helpful thoughts and suggestions were presented.

Nervous and Pale

"WHEN just a girl I was in very bad health," says Mrs. Charles Abell, whose portrait is reproduced here. "I was weak and run-down, nervous and very pale. I suffered . . . with pain in my sides and back. The pains would bear down in my sides and I would get so weak in my knees I couldn't stand. I suffered dreadfully.

"I took Cardui at this time, three or four bottles, and it helped me. I gained strength and my health was much better.

"About two years ago I had a sick spell and was in a pretty bad fix. I would have dizzy spells and very severe nervous headaches. I began taking Cardui. Well, the improvement was soon apparent. I was less nervous. The headaches were less frequent. I could do more of my work. I took nine bottles (of Cardui) for this trouble.

"Now my health is good. I feel fine and my friends comment on how well I look. I go anywhere and, if I can't get help, can do my own work. Cardui has been the 'making of me,' and I'm most grateful."

Cardui has been in successful use as a tonic medicine for women for almost fifty years. During that time thousands and thousands of women have reported the benefit they derived from its use, in the treatment of different ailments common to women.

For six centuries the chief ingredient of Cardui has been recommended by medical authorities for the treatment of different female troubles.

With this long history of successful use behind it, Cardui is manufactured in modern, scientific laboratories, where every care is taken to ensure absolute purity and to see that each bottle contains the full strength of the vegetable ingredients in the exact proportions that science and experience have shown to be best for the purpose.

Tenth Street P.-T. A. Hears Address By Dr. Lacy

Dr. Lacy, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, made an interesting address at the November meeting of the Tenth Street Parent-Teacher association held in the school auditorium. He told in detail of the plan to have special instruction in religious education in connection with the public schools of Atlanta, which was not passed by the board. He stressed the facts that morality and Christianity cannot be separated and that education alone is not keeping down crime. He gave some interesting statistics in proof of these facts.

Miss Holland, head of the Camp Fire Girls, spoke interestingly of that organization, telling of its origin, aims, and purposes. Mrs. Cliett, president, asked the cooperation of the association in the "City Beautiful Movement." There were 364 present at the meeting.

Prizes were awarded to the following classes for having the greatest number of mothers present: Mrs. Acosta, high kindergarten; Miss Tutwiler, high one; Mrs. Jones, high, low three; Mrs. Moore, low six.

Parent-Teacher Meetings.

All fathers of the Ponce de Leon school children are especially invited to the "daddies' meeting" on Friday evening, November 13, at 8 o'clock in the school auditorium. An unusually entertaining program is announced. Colonel George M. Napier, the attorney general of Georgia, will deliver the address. The first grade orchestra will give selections and several grades will have numbers on the program. An informal reception will be held after the meeting.

The Ben Hill P.-T. A. will hold its Thanksgiving meeting on Friday afternoon, November 13, at 2:30 o'clock. Two little plays have been prepared by the first and second and sixth and seventh grades, and there will also be a speaker for the afternoon. All members and friends are urged to attend.

There will be an executive board meeting of the Samuel M. Inman P.-T. A. on Wednesday morning, November 11, at 9:30 in the teachers' rest room. All members are urged to be present.

The P.-T. A. of the North Avenue Presbyterian school will observe "Fathers' Night" on next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. The meeting will be held in the new Frank Inman auditorium. Dr. M. L. Brittain will be the speaker of the occasion. All friends and patrons of the school are cordially invited to be present.

The Ormewood P.-T. A. will hold its regular monthly meeting at the schoolhouse Friday afternoon, November 13, at 2:30. A health program will be given. Dr. R. M. Eubanks will speak on "Teeth." Miss Cone will speak on "Nutrition." A full attendance is desired.

The executive board of the Girls' High School P.-T. A. will hold its regular monthly meeting Wednesday, November 11, at 11:30 o'clock at the Girls' High school. Mrs. W. L. Schell, president of the association, urges every member to be present.

There will be a "daddies" meeting of the P.-T. A. of Pryor Street school Tuesday evening, November 10, at 7:30 o'clock in the school auditorium, the president, Mrs. W. J. Thebaut, presiding. It is the urgent desire of the president that every member of the association be present. Any parent not already a member is very cordially invited to attend. Professor Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, will be the speaker of the evening. After the meeting refreshments will be served and a social hour enjoyed.

The pre-school age circle of Pryor Street P.-T. A. will meet Thursday afternoon, November 12, at 3 o'clock. Miss McAlpine will speak and it is hoped that every member will be present.

The pre-school chairmen of Atlanta and the fifth district will meet Wednesday, November 11, at 12 o'clock at the Henry Grady. The subject for the day is "Play, Games and Toys." All presidents of the P.-T. A. are invited.

All mothers interested in child feeding are invited to attend the nutrition classes. Lesson 2, November 10, will be on "The Food for the Small Child." The lecture starts at 2:45 in the afternoon. The classes are held at Bass Junior High, O'Keefe Junior High, Joe Brown Junior High and Girls' High school.

There will be a meeting of the Spring Street Parent-Teacher association on Wednesday, November 11, at 3 o'clock. Chairmen of all committees will make reports.

The Lee Street P.-T. A. will hold its regular monthly meeting Tuesday afternoon, November 10, at 3 o'clock in the school auditorium. An interesting Camp Fire program led by Miss Louise Holland, local Camp Fire executive, will be given. At this meeting, the children who win the prize tickets to the better films matinees at the Howard theater will be given a party by Mrs. O. C. Robbins, chairman, who will also chaperon them to the matinee. A large attendance is anticipated.

A combined meeting of the P.-T. A. and "daddies" will be held at the Grant Park school on Thursday, November 12, at 7:30 p. m. All members of the association and "daddies" are urged to be present to hear our superintendent.

The East Lake P.-T. A. meeting will be held Friday, November 13, at 3 o'clock. After the business session, Miss Osburn, of the DeKalb county health department, will address the ladies, and Mrs. F. W. Boring, of Decatur, will sing. The citizenship department of East Lake P.-T. A. will hold its regular meeting on Monday, November 16. Mrs. Fugitt, the chairman, will announce the place of meeting on Friday at P.-T. A. meeting. She urges a full attendance at this meeting and asks each member to bring a current topic for discussion.

Mrs. J. C. Mellichamp, chairman of the P.-T. A. council citizenship committee, urges the chairmen and co-chairmen of this committee to meet with her at her home, 595 Piedmont avenue, Thursday afternoon, November 12, at 2:30 o'clock.

A meeting of the pre-school age circle of Moreland school will be held Friday afternoon, November 13, at 3 o'clock at the school. All mothers interested are invited to be present.

The November meeting of Winona Park P.-T. A. will be a daddies meeting to be held Tuesday night, November 10 at 8 o'clock in the school auditorium. An interesting program has been planned for the entertainment of the daddies. Professor R. E. Wager, of Emory university will be the speaker of the evening, talking on a subject of interest to all. Mrs. Daniel, of Decatur, who is studying voice at Agnes Scott, will give several selections. The school orchestra, under the direction of Mrs. Connie Clarke, will also give several numbers. All patrons and friends of Winona Park are cordially invited.

The Ben Hill P.-T. A. will meet next Friday, November 13, at 2:15 o'clock, in the school building. Every mother is urged to be present.

The pre-school age circle of Moses W. Formwalt P.-T. A. will hold its regular monthly meeting Tuesday afternoon, November 10, at 2:30 o'clock.

Chairman Urges Observance Of "Children's Book Week"

Mrs. George W. Price, P.-T. A. council chairman of children's reading has written the following article, which is timely and appropriate, as the week of November 8 will be observed throughout the United States as "children's book week:"

"All hail children's book week! Here is a chance for each individual member of the P.-T. A. to do a splendid bit of work with her own children, which will spread a good influence everywhere.

"Just as we learned that pennies make the dollars in our thrift week and that the individual votes of the good people make good government in our citizenship week, so this week we learn that every individual who gives a good book to some boy or girl is helping to build the nation's first line of defense against weakness from within.

"William Bigelow, editor of one of our leading magazines, quotes Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, as saying: 'Guidance in the right use of leisure is vastly more important than vocational guidance.' He made the statement, based on statistics, that 64 per cent of our school children never get beyond the eighth grade, and adds: 'A democracy cannot continue indefinitely to be successful if more than a majority of the people are but half educated. If all our people could be induced to read, if only for pleasure and with never a thought of self-improvement, the leaven of understanding would inevitable raise the level of our national life."

"Last year 4,400 communities celebrated book week. It was originated six years ago to stimulate interest in boys' and girls' reading. Throughout the year it inspires a growing consciousness of the importance of children's books, of their influence in character development and in the building of citizenship and of the contribution they can make to the happiness of the individual throughout line.

"Anne C. Moore, of the New York public library, asserts: 'All the best teaching is done unconsciously. Too frequently in books about children's reading there is a spirit of teaching instead of the spirit of play. The child's moods should be respected in all our endeavors to bring children and books into natural and intimate association. Sometimes a child will enjoy an imaginative book; at other times he will long for a more realistic type of story. Let children make different kinds of books their friends.'

"Fireside companionship begins when the child is very young. Well can we remember the long winter evenings when the family was grouped about the library table, each member busily reading. If mothers and fathers would only realize that children, whether 5 of 15 must be amused, we would have a great deal to be thankful for in the way of fewer broken windows and less juvenile mischief. 'More books; fewer gangs.' If parents want their children to stay home nights, they must provide amusement, and, in the case of young children, get them into the 'evening by the fireside' habit."

William M. Jardine, United States secretary of agriculture, in a recent interview said, "Let a boy have good books; that is what we need in our agriculture—more fireplaces with books handy. But don't cram anything down a boy; just throw good books around him. Up to fifteen is the time for the home to do its work for the boy. Don't think the school can do it all. Let the teacher do all he can; he can't do everything."

Government figures show that out of all the hours between birth and the age of legal maturity, the child spends an average of only about one-twentieth of the total time in school. Can the school teach as much in one year as the home can in twenty? Obviously not. Children should be taught that books are friends, friends that will not move away or "get mad." Once you start a child on the first of a series of interesting adventures, he will want the next and the next.

"Atlanta has eight public libraries for white people. I did not know until I had made several mistakes and started out on an investigating tour that the libraries serve as a source of authentic information on the subject of all books and publications. When buying sets of books, do so advisedly. Learn something of the different editions.

Your school chairman may be furnished with a "Discriminating List" selected and edited by authorities on the ready of boys and girls from "nursery rhymes to grown-up times."

I should like each chairman to meet the librarian in the children's department of the main branch. Ask for her and she will be glad to talk to you and give you one of these valuable lists for your school.

"Again I urge you to buy at least one book for either your own or the child of another and take your part in the celebration of "Children's Book Week."

P.-T. A. Press To Hold Meeting.

Mrs. C. E. Betts, P.-T. A. council publicity chairman, requests all press chairmen of Parent-Teacher associations in the city to attend a meeting at the Chamber of Commerce building, room 207, at 11 o'clock, Tuesday morning, November 10.

Miss Mildred Cabaniss, of The Atlanta Journal, and Mrs. John T. Toler, Constitution P.-T. A. editor, will address the meeting, giving constructive suggestions to the press chairmen, concerning the copy for the Sunday Parent-Teacher pages.

Peachtree Heights P.-T. A. Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of P.-T. A. of Peachtree Heights school was held Tuesday afternoon. A most interesting program was given by the first and second grades. Music was furnished by the new orchestra, this being their first public appearance.

The seventh grade boys and girls have just gotten out the first issue of their school paper, "The Peachtree Heights School Journal." It will be issued weekly and give all the school news.

A most enjoyable party was given Halloween. A nice sum was realized for the school.

The E. Rivers kindergarten was given a surprise party on Halloween by Mrs. Bernett, who came out in costume and told the little fellows a lovely story.

The kindergarten is in their new building and much interest is being shown by the children as well as mothers.

The first grade won the prize and tickets to Howard.

Brookhaven P.-T. A. Daddies' Meeting.

The Brookhaven P.-T. A. held its regular meeting Tuesday evening in the form of a Daddies' meeting, to which mothers and daddies were invited.

The president, Mrs. E. A. Veal, made the daddies feel at home by her speech of welcome, all of whom joined the association and pledged their support to the organization. Reports of secretary and treasurer were read and accepted. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $34.67 after $41.61 had been paid out during the month of October.

The speakers for the evening were Rev. J. D. Jones, Z. W. Jones, H. A. Laporte and W. A. Reynolds.

Punch was served by Misses Bertha and Myrtle Wright, Margaret Roberts and Evelyn Wall.

Oakland City P.-T. A. Is Active.

The Oakland City P.-T. A. held its regular November meeting Wednesday afternoon at the school auditorium. There was a large number of mothers present and Miss Awtell's class, the high sixth, won the attendance prize. Mrs. Malone, chairman of the pre-school age of the P.-T. A. council, gave a talk to the mothers. She outlined the work of the pre-school age committee for the coming year and spoke of the importance of every mother taking advantage of the nutrition classes at Joe Brown Junior High school and of every meeting of the Oakland City committee, at which some one would speak on a subject relating to the pre-school age. Miss Spharr, the principal, spoke on the crowded condition of the school and the need of additional grounds and buildings. An effort is being made to obtain the adjoining empty lot for the school.

Mrs. Haskins reported on better films and on a moving picture show which will be given in the near future. A cake sale will be held just before Thanksgiving. The exact date will be announced later to the children.

Mrs. Irwin, the president, read the names of the chairmen of the different committees and their co-workers. The chairmen are: Better films, Mrs. Haskins; press, Mrs. N. W. Printup; ways and means, Mrs. R. C. Upchurch; grounds and buildings, Mrs. Henry Holcomb; citizenship, Mrs. C. M. Coffee; welfare, Mrs. Menkee; social, Mrs. E. J. Marchman; hospitality, Mrs. Nelson Spratt; pre-school age, Mrs. Gary; membership, Mrs. Herbert West; librarian, Mrs. P. M. Page.

A very instructive and lively meeting was held and it is hoped there will be an even larger attendance next month.

Luckie St. P.-T. A. Has Record Attendance.

Luckie street school P.-T. A. enjoyed a record attendance of members on Wednesday afternoon at its November meeting held in the school auditorium.

The association is unusually active this year under the inspiring leadership of its president, Mrs. Ehlers assisted by a corps of enthusiastic officers and chairmen.

Mrs. Ingram, pre-school age chairman gave a most interesting talk of the work of her committee and announced the nutrition course being held at O'Keefe Junior Hi, for mothers, extending a cordial invitation to join the classes, also to join her pre-school age circle

Mrs. Jolly followed with a resume of kindergarten work, explaining how the pre-school circle prepared the children for kindergarten.

In her talk she stressed the importance of curiosity as a means of knowledge. Responsibility is taught by way of caring for toys, crayons, books, etc.; also courtesy and service. Self-reliance by neat appearpearance in dress. Mrs. Jolly extended a cordial invitation to visit the Nellie Petegs Black kindergarten, visitors always welcome.

Mrs. Brown, chairman on safety, urged observation of fire prevention week.

Mrs. Garner, better films chairman, presented tickets for the Howard theater children's matinee, to the winning rooms for mothers attendance, Miss Cockrell's room for high grade and Miss Thrasher for low grade.

The Georgia Railway and Power company quartet sang several selections.

St. Phillips P.-T. A. Holds Meeting.

The second meeting of the St. Philips P.-T. A. was held Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the cathedral, with 30 members present. New officers were elected, as follows: Mrs. F. A. Shields, president; Mrs. C. G. Coster, vice president; Mrs. G. K. Howe, secretary; Mrs. B. H. Sofage, treasurer. Committees were appointed, after which Mr. Johnson spoke on helps for church organization. Mr. Shaw, Sunday school superintendent, very ably assisted in getting the club organized.

Boys' High P.-T. Announce Plans For This Year

The regular monthly meeting of the Boys' High Parent-Teacher association took place in the military building of the senior high school for boys, on Tuesday evening.

The president, Mrs. Watkins, announced the chairmen for the ensuing year as follows: membership, Mrs. J. L. Rankin; hot lunch, Mrs. C. L. Williamson; athletics, Stuart McGinty; grounds, Mrs. Hugh Lokey; school publications; John M. Cooper; music, Mrs. Charles E. Dowman; P.-T. A. council, Mrs. F. T. Sned; educational welfare, Joel Hunter; better films, Mrs. E. C. Kent; finance, Albert S. Adams; publicity, Mrs. Joseph E. Price.

Mr. Epps gave a brief outline of the work planned for the orchestra. Thirty boys are now working under his direction and later in the year he will put on a full evening concert of high-class music.

Mr. Smith, principal, read an interesting financial report of the various school activities.

Burton Hudgins spoke in behalf of the senior annual asking the cooperation of the parents in making a success of this publication.

An interesting feature of the evening was the delightful talk of Mrs. C. L. Williamson, hot lunch chairman. In the discussion which followed, plans were made for the opening of a lunch room at an early date, many mothers volunteering their services

The 100 per cent membership drive is now in full swing and the outlook for a most successful year is very encouraging.

Grove Park P.-T. A. Meets.

Grove Park P.-T. A. met Wednesday at the schoolhouse, Mrs. R. A. Carmichael presiding.

A short program was given by Mrs. Ashford's and Mrs. Haines' first grades, Miss Scott's second, and Miss Phillips' fourth.

The treasurer, Mrs. Cox, reported $72.21 made at the Halloween carnival and the candy pulling held last Friday at the schoolhouse; also check for $50 from the Southeastern Fair association, fourth prize for Grove Park's booth in the Liberal Arts building.

Reports were given by chairmen of the different committees, special attention being called to the report of Mrs. J. C. McMillan, Sr., chairman of the grounds committee, who reported wonderful progress in the grading and clearing of the school grounds by the county. A vote of thanks to Mrs. McMillan and her committee was proposed and enthusiastically given.

The speaker of the afternoon was Dr. Basmajoin, formerly of Armenia. He gave a most interesting lecture on "The System of Education in Turkey." He is to give a lecture Friday afternoon for the children, with costumes and the musical instruments of his country. The lecture is to be given at the schoolhouse. An admission of 10 cents will be charged.

The committee on pre-school age will have charge of the program for December. Mrs. W. M. Carmichael is chairman of this committee and an interesting program is promised.

All ladies are asked to participate in a plate-and-cup shower at this meeting, the first Wednesday in December.

Whiteford Ave. P.-T. A. Daddies' Meeting.

The Parent-Teacher association of the Whiteford Avenue school held the November meeting Monday evening in the form of a "daddies'" meeting. Mrs. Boring entertained with a vocal number.

Dispensing with all business the meeting was given over to W. A. Sutton, superintendent of schools. As a token of love a number of school children sang a song to Mr. Sutton, presenting him with a basket of beautiful flowers, all grown on the school grounds through the untiring efforts of Miss Rhodes, principal of school, and the children.

Mr. Sutton's helpful and impressive address was a plea to the parents to care for the health of the child above all else, the literary training of the child who should have a quiet and undisturbed study hour in the home coming next. The parents were begged to see that character building begun in the home, character being the most fundamental thing in life.

Mr. Jamieson, head of Boy Scouts, made a very interesting talk on Scout work in the "good turns" they were doing.

After adjournment all were invited into the dining room for refreshments and a social visit,

Y. W. H. A. Activities. Are Announced.

The matrons' reducing class of the Y. W. H. A. meets every Tuesday and Thursday from 10 to 11 o'clock at the clubhouse, corner Washington and Clark streets. Mrs. F. J. Terrell is director.

Each Tuesday evening from 6:30 to 8 o'clock the cooking class meets, and under the guidance of Miss Louise Swartz, of the Commercial High school, the young ladies are rapidly becoming proficient chefs

Miss Schwartz also instructs a class in sewing on Thursday night, 7 to 8:30 o'clock, at the same place.

On each Thursday morning from 11 to 12:30 o'clock classes in arts and crafts meet under the instruction of Miss Lillian Williamson.

The classes in gymnasium meet Wednesday nights from 7 to 8 o'clock with Mrs. F. J. Terrell in charge. All members of the matrons' reducing class are invited to take advantage of this evening class without any extra charge.

The basketball team meets on Monday and Wednesday, 7 to 8 o'clock, and Saturday, 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock, at 90 Capitol avenue; Joe Finkelstein, coach.

Announcements are made for the old-time kaffee klatch on November 10 at 8 o'clock for members and their friends.

On November 17 at 8 o'clock a card and mah jongg party will be held. And card game may be played, as there are prizes for each table. Guests are asked to bring their own games and pencils. Many couples have already made reservations. For detailed information, telephone Mrs. Charles Buckwald and Mrs. Joe Weiss, chairmen.

A rummage and paper sale are planned and anyone who has paper or rummage, please call Main 5039 and the committee will call for it.

William A. Bass P.-T. A. Nov. Meeting Is of Unusual Interest

The November meeting of the William A. Bass P.-T. A. was held Wednesday afternoon in the class gymnasium of the school, the president, Mrs. Henry Bauer, presiding.

Mrs. Betts, chairman of boys and girls clubs, reported a tree having been planted on the campus of the school. This was done by the Camp Fire Girls, honoring the principal, J. H. Smith.

A trophy has been offered by the association for the first grade attaining 100 per cent membership in the P.-T. A., of both father and mother. Another trophy has also been offered for the grade showing 100 per cent attendance or representation at the P.-T. A. meetings. One will be given for each semester.

Miss Wright, the school nurse reported having cared for 125 cases during the month of October. General conditions are very good. A few sheets and blankets are needed for the emergency hospital in the school. In any member of the association wishes to make such a gift, it will be acceptable.

Members of the P.-T. A. are requested to save all papers until the third week in November at which time J. H. Smith, the principal, states he will ask for collection and make disposition of them. Please tie papers into bundles for easy handling. The kitchen for the department of domestic science is practically complete.

Announcement was made that William A. Bass Junior High school won a prize of $100 for display at the Southeastern fair. Booth was in charge of Mr. Mason.

The P.-T. A. will send five members of the association to attend the nutrition classes, sponsored by the Pre-School circles. These classes are being held each Tuesday in November at William A. Bass Junior High school.

The grades chairman, Mrs. Leo Strauss, announces a tea to be given Friday, November 20, at 3 o'clock at the school house. All mothers of the eighth grades also teachers of all eighth grades in Bass Junior High school are cordially invited to attend this tea.

The president announced that the programs would be so arranged as to give five minutes at each meeting for any constructive suggestions the members of the association would care to offer. If one has a helpful suggestion you care to offer, bring it (written if possible) and present it at that time. Announcement was made that for this week 45 grades out of 47 made a record of 100 per cent in banking. Bass school is fighting for 100 per cent perfect teeth. Winners for attendance at the meeting Wednesday were seven B-1, eight B-6 and eight B-4 (a tie) also nine B-1.

Mrs. M. B. McLean, chairman for education and library extension, announced that a book shower would be held November 9-14. These books are for the library of the school. Members of the association are requested to give such books as are suitable, if they have any they would like to donate. A trained librarian will catalog these and other books in the library. A copy of the program for children's book week, November 8-14, which will be carried out in the William A. Bass Junior High school, was given each mother present. Fully in keeping with the subject of children's book week, Miss Cox, of the Carnegie library, gave a talk on "What Our Boys and Girls Should Read."

Mrs. Charles Goodman spoke to the association, her subject being "Gratitude, the Spirit of Thanksgiving."

The members of the association rose in silent recognition of the great loss sustained by the Congress of Parents and Teachers, through the death of Mrs. Harriet McClelland, mother of Mrs. Birney.

Some confusion seems to have resulted from the fact that a cooking school, which is sponsored by the ways and means committee of the P.-T. A. and a series of nutrition classes, sponsored by the Pre-School circle are both being conducted at William A. Bass school during the month of November. These are wholly different programs and while similar, the cooking school conducted by Mrs. Stanfield covers general diet and the dates are November 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 at 10 o'clock each morning during that week. The nutrition classes are sponsored by the Pre-School circle, particularly for mothers of pre-school and small children in school, and are held once each week, Tuesday at 2:45 p. m. Mothers may attend one or both. Special diets for small children will be the prime subjects and demonstrations at the nutrition classes.

"Are you going to hold any investigations?" "No," answered Senator Sorghum. "You can start an investigation, but when it gets going nobody can hold it."—Washington Star.

Today Is Armistice Sunday.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has issued an appeal to the churches of America to use to the utmost Armistice Sunday and Armistice day in the promotion of world understanding, world good will, world justice and world peace.

In approval of this appeal, the committee on church cooperation (an interdenominational organization of Atlanta) has asked that all churches in our city observe this day.

President Coolidge says: "Our country has definitely relinquished the old standard of dealing with other countries by terror and force and is definitely committed to the new standard of dealing with them through friendship and understanding." In the church services today there is a great opportunity for bringing the people of the nation to the support of the president in his purpose as declared in the above statement.

Let us remember that millions who made the supreme sacrifice in the great war died in the hope that it might be the war "to end war." Let us honor their memory by working to this end.

Rev. and Mrs. Howard Taylor Will Lead Services Here

An occasion of striking importance is promised for the early days of December when Rev. and Mrs. Howard Taylor will hold a series of services in North Avenue Presbyterian church.

Dr. Taylor, who is well known, is the son of that great missionary, Hudson Taylor, who established China's Inland mission, and Mrs. Taylor, to whom a warm welcome will also be accorded on this their second visit to Atlanta, is the daughter of one of the world's foremost evangelists and writers, the Rev. Gratton Guinness.

In the coming of this consecrated couple a rare opportunity is offered to those who rejoice in high scholarship as well as piety, and an invitation is given to members of other churches and denominations to share with the membership of North Avenue church in partaking of this spiritual feast promised for December.

Calendar of Meetings

Interdenominational

At the Central Presbyterian church this afternoon at 3 o'clock there will be a mass meeting in the interest of world peace and commemoration of the signing of the armistice. Dr. Ashby Jones and Eugene Black are the speakers.

Episcopal

The local assembly of the Daughters of the King will hold its annual meeting Tuesday, November 10, at 10 o'clock in St. Philip's cathedral.

Methodist

All Methodist churches of the North Atlanta district are urged to reserve Wednesday, December 2, for the fourth quarterly meeting of the missionary society.

The business women of Trinity Methodist church will meet at the church Monday evening, November 9, at 6 o'clock. Supper will be served by Circle No. 9, Mrs. Hartsonck chairman.

Circle No. 3 of the Martha Brown Memorial church will meet Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock with Mrs. Warren on South Moreland avenue.

The St. Paul Missionary circles will meet Monday at 3 o'clock as follows: No. 1 at 129 Rogers avenue, No. 2 at 83 Park avenue, No. 3 at 348 East Georgia avenue, No. 4 at the church, No. 5 at the church, No. 7 at 124 Broyles street, No. 8 at 258 Cherokee avenue, No. 9 at 91 Loomis avenue, No. 10 at 51 Loomis avenue, No. 11 at 447 Bass street.

Baptist

The regular monthly meeting of the Business and Professional Women's Circle of the First Baptist Church will be held at the church this evening at 6 o'clock.

The business meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Kirkwood Baptist Church will be held at the church Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Oakhurst Baptist Church will meet at the church Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Circle No. 3 has charge of the program.

Circle No. 2 of the Gordon Street Baptist church will give a silver tea at the home of Dr. W. H. Faust, 439 Lucile avenue, on Thursday of this week at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. R. C. Adkins is chairman. The proceeds from the tea will go to the building fund. Friends outside of the church are cordially invited.

The Atlanta Baptist Missionary union will begin a series of missionary rallies on November 20. The first will be held on the 20th at Inman Yards Baptist church. It will be an all-day meeting, opening at 9:30 a. m. Bring box lunch. Mrs. T. E. White is secretary of this, the second district.

The Fannie E. Hock mission study class of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church will meet Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock with Mrs. W. T. Martin in the St. Andrews apartment at 595 West Peachtree.

The Pollard mission study class of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church will meet Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock with Miss Mary Wood, 21 East Eighth street. Mrs. Wills is conducting study on W. M. U. manual

Adriel Class Elects Officers.

In addition to the regular business meeting of the Adriel class of the First Christian church, held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Mayfield, 566 Capitol avenue, Saturday evening, a social hour was enjoyed.

A business meeting preceded the frolic, which was attended by 25 adults. Miss Elizabeth Burke, president, presided.

Various committees that were appointed at the last meeting made final reports, among which the by-laws committee, through its acting chairman, J. H. Bush, reported completion of a new set of by-laws for the class, which, with a few alterations and corrections, was adopted unanimously. A rising vote of thanks was extended the committee, comprised of J. H. Bush, Mrs. T. F. Hemminger and Miss Leona Hampton by the entire class.

The nominating committee reported that it selected the following to serve for the coming year as officers: Mrs. A. R. Mayfield, president; Mrs. J. H. Bush, vice president; Mrs. T. F. Hemminger, recording secretary; Mrs. Martha Arnold, corresponding secretary, and G. H. Turnipseed, treasurer. Upon motion, the report was adopted as a whole unanimously, and the newly elected officers will be installed at the November meeting, to be held the last Saturday of this month. A banquet, at a downtown restaurant will feature this gathering, in addition yearly reports will be made by the following retiring officers: Miss Elizabeth Burke, president; Mrs. G. H. Turnipseed, vice president; Miss Leona Hampton, recording secretary; Miss Grace Thornton, corresponding secretary, and J. H. Bush, treasurer.

It it anticipated that Rev. and Mrs. C. R. Stauffer and Dr. and Mrs. Elzie B. Thomas, will be present at the installation ceremonies.

Mr. Leide at N. A. Presbyterian School.

One of the greatest pleasures of the year for the North Avenue Presbyterian school took place Wednesday morning when Enrico Leide, at the invitation of Mrs. Mabelle S. Wall, director of the music department at North avenue, gave a most interesting talk on the conventional symphony orchestra, explaining the different choirs of the orchestra and illustrating wood, wind, brass and percussion sections with instruments belonging to these, kindly loaned by the Cable company.

The string section was illustrated by beautiful 'cello solos by Mr. Leide himself and by violin solos by Miss Spencer MacGaughey.

Returned Missionary Sees Great Changes.

Miss Bess Combs, after six years spent in doing evangelistic work in China, is again in the United States doing field work for the woman's department of the Methodist Episcopal church, south.

Miss Combs spoke to the young people of the two Atlanta districts of Methodism in a service at St. Mark's church last Sunday afternoon.

Miss Combs said that when she went to China the Chinese women often followed her down the street to see what she was wearing and she had a very difficult time learning the language. After six years away, however, she found herself as interested in seeing what girls at home are wearing and had to learn some new words in her own native language—such as flapper and sheik.

Briefly Told

Miss Sze Vong Pau, who was for many years president of the China Conference Woman's Missionary society is coming to the United States this fall and will be China's representative at the woman's council of the M. E. Church, South, at its annual meeting in Raleigh, N. C., early in 1926. Miss Pau is principal of the primary department of McTyiere, the Methodist school for girls at Shanghai. She will study in Nashville, Tenn., this winter.

The Susannah Wesley class of the Druid Hills Methodist church undertook a life scholarship at Wesleyan college. They were allowed five years in which to raise the necessary amount of money but only three years have passed and the entire amount has been paid.

Mrs. E. W. Brogdon, treasurer for the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society, has received a letter from Mrs. Ina Davis Fulton, treasurer for the woman's department of the board of missions of the M. E. church, south, congratulating her on the financial increase the conference has made this year.

The Americus district of the South Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society was the only district in which the auxiliaries were 100 per cent observing the week of prayer in 1924. The report for 1925 has not been received as the week of prayer just closes today.

A thrilling letter has reached the desk of The Methodist editor telling of the travels of Miss Margaret Cook and Miss Ruth Field, of Newnan, who left Atlanta early in the summer to do kindergarten work in Japan. Space prevents the use of the letter. The points visited en route were the Life Service Conference in Edinburgh first, then all of Scotland, England, Brussels, France, Switzerland, Italy, the Mediterranean Sea, Egypt, the Holy Land, Ceylon, Singapore, Shanghai and Hong Kong. They were scheduled to reach the Mission school at Kobe, Japan, on September 26, but definite information concerning their arrival has not yet been received by home folks in Newnan. They visited many other mission stations in their travels.

Another little life member of the Missionary society is being welcomed most cordially by the members of the north Georgia conference. The little fellow is the son of Mrs. Rankin Manley, better known to the women of the Missionary society as Christine McEachern. He is the second grandson of Mrs. J. N. McEachern, corresponding secretary of the conference.

Mrs. W. C. Thompson, of Madison, Ga., was in Atlanta Sunday and presided over the mass meeting for Methodist young people at St. Mark church. Mrs. Thompson is superintendent of young people for the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society.

The W. M. S., of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church, is holding an interesting mission study class this week with 30 women in attendance. The W. M. U. manual of methods is being efficiently taught by Mrs. J. W. Wills.

Boulevard Park Auxiliary to Meet.

The November meeting of the Boulevard Park Auxiliary will be held Monday, November 9, at 3 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. J. A. Walker, 28 Cresthill avenue.

Many interesting subjects will be discussed at this meeting and reports will be received from delegates to the city federation, also from the fifth district meeting.

Miss Rosa Woodberry, who has recently conducted a class in parliamentary law for the club, will give a lecture on parliamentary law. This will afford members of the club, who were unable to attend the classes, an opportunity to hear Miss Woodberry at the regular meeting.

Mr. Botts, landscape gardener with the Ashford Park Nurseries, will talk to the members of the club on "Tree and Shrub Planting." In this talk he will set forth the time for planting various ornamental and shade trees, the kind to plant for certain purposes, the method of planting and general care. He will also set forth proper planning and planting of evergreens and flowering shrubs. This is a subject in which all members should be interested, and the president, Mrs. Wolfe, particularly urges that members be present to secure the advantage the information and suggestions Mr. Botts will give.

Inman Park Methodist Women.

At the regular monthly meeting held at Inman Park Methodist church on Monday, November 2, a surprise feature of the program was the presentation of life memberships in the Woman's Missionary society to Mrs. Henry Mays and Mrs. George Bell. Mrs. Bell's membership was a gift from her own circle. Mrs. Mays' was intended to be a gift from her circle, of which Mrs. LeMay is chairman, but the other women of the society heard about it and asked to have a part in it. Mrs. George H. Butler was reelected president.

Electa Chapter, O. E. S. Holds Meeting.

On Tuesday evening, November 3, Electa chapter, No. 6, O. E. S., was honored to have past matrons and past patrons, among them being Mrs. Rose M. Ashby, most worthy grand marshall of the general grand chapter of the world, was present. Mrs. Eva Cummings, the only living active charter member of Electa, opened the meeting with prayer.

Mrs. Della Moore, Mrs. Annie Haas, Mrs. H. T. Cox, Mrs. Omie D. Hopkins, Mrs. Kathleen McElhaney and W. B. Cummings and R. S. Moran were honor guests of the evening. It proved an inspiration to have these and so many visitors from sister chapters.

Mrs. S. L. Davis, an affiliated past matron, also was present. A musical program was rendered.

Y. W. C. A. Will Hold Week of Prayer.

The Young Woman's Christian association will observe a week of prayer beginning Sunday afternoon, November 8, with vesper service led by Dr. W. W. Alexander, from 4 to 5 o'clock. Services thereafter will take place Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings from 6:30 to 7 o'clock, and will be led by Mrs. E. K. Large, Mrs. John McEachern and Mrs. W. A. Smart, respectively.

MRS. J. W. WILLS

The formal resignation of Mrs. J. W. Wills was accepted with regret. Her facile pen and inspirational ideals have led many to greater effort. We hope she continues an earnest colaborer in the federation.

Mrs. Lucile Daniel Clark comes well equipped for the work, her broad sympathies and wide experience rendering her peculiarly fit for the office.

MRS. LEWIS,
President.

Mrs. J. W. Wills has been a most valued member of the editorial staff of the federation for the past two years. Her love for the page and her steadfast belief in its possibilities have helped greatly in its development. She has been an inspiration and a kind assistant to new editors coming in during her term of office. On the several occasions when she has acted as state editor for weeks at a time during Miss Woodberry's summer vacation, she has served most acceptably. We are delighted to know that she will continue in the federation as one of the directors in order that her ideas may continue to cause us to make progress.

MRS. WALLACE ROGERS,
Methodist Editor.

The state editor unites with the denominational editors in expressing hearty appreciation of the devoted service and ability of our retiring Baptist editor, Mrs. J. W. Wills. She developed comparatively unknown fields in religious journalism, and presented her church's work with fine vision and understanding. It is a matter of cordial interest that Mrs. Wills has accepted a position on the federated church board, and will be frequently heard from in these columns, as a watchman on Zion's walls.

ROSA WOODBERRY.

It gives us real pleasure to present the photograph of our retiring Baptist editor today. Always on the search for news items and articles of interest about the work of the Baptists, she has taught us something of the value of advertising in the work of the Master's kingdom. It has been her joy to "give of her best to the Master," and her colleagues delight to do her honor. May we follow her example of beautiful devotion to duty and make her heart glad by striving to have our page grow better and better as the weeks go by.

MRS. HARVEY CLARK.

It has been a very rare pleasure indeed to be permitted to associate with Mrs. J. W. Wills as one of the editors of the Federated Church Women of Georgia's page. Her editorials and articles have shown an unusual gift of the pen and her church has also been ably represented by her through this medium.

She has a virile and magnetic personality, is possessed of fearlessness, initiative, and originality, a combination seldom, if ever, found in one person, and the entire page feels that they have suffered a distinct loss in her withdrawal. Just as would be expected of her, instead of leaving a gap difficult to bridge, she threw her own mantle, like Elijah of old, upon the shoulders of Mrs. Harvey Clarke, and while her own particular niche can never be held by another, she could not have made a wiser choice to "carry on" her work, where she felt compelled to leave it off.

In closing I wish for her this: "May goodness and mercy follow her all the days of her life," and when she shall "have crossed over the river to rest in the shade of the trees" may she "dwell in the house of the Lord forever!"

Mission Study Class Of Baptist Church.

A meeting of the Fannie E. Heck Mission study class of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church was held Tuesday with Mrs. W. F. Martin in the St. Andrews apartments. The study of "In Royal Service" proved a most interesting one. Fannie E. Heck, who was a pioneer in missionary work is a notable example of what real mission study will do. It broadens the vision in every way and helps one to secure an unprejudiced feeling toward all races. It gives consciousness of God's love to all mankind and helps one to acquire an accurate knowledge of the historical, moral and religious conditions of mission lands. Through mission study one sees the progress of Christianity and the vastness of the field and the scarcity of laborers. We learn how to sympathize with the needs and difficulties of the missionaries and to appreciate our own blessings and the study reveals to us our responsibility in doing our part to make our lives count for the most. Mission study convinces us that money is essential for victory and the greatest of all truths that our prayer life is deepened through mission study. The above blessings of the study speak volumes in favor of the organizations of classes in which groups of earnest workers gladly give many hours of hard study to obtain these results. This Fannie E. Heck mission study class is free to any who are interested and meets Tuesdays at 10 o'clock with Mrs. Martin.

The Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church has two active mission study classes. The Pollard, organized last year and having 60 examinations taken on the five books studied, has resumed its work with more interest and enthusiasm than ever and meets each Wednesday at 10 o'clock with Miss Mary Wood, who is a most beloved member, at her home, 21 East Eighth street.

Business Women To Present Play.

The Business Woman's league, Church of the Incarnation, will present a three-act play, "Next Door," at the parish house on Lee street Thursday evening, November 12, at 8 o'clock.

The play is under the direction of Miss Mary Head. Tickets are now on sale. Price of admission, 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. Music will be furnished by Mrs. C. L. Jack Williams' orchestra.

Miss Laura Smith Praises Alliance.

Miss Laura Smith, who has been visiting in Atlanta recently, in a conference with the secretary of the Atlanta office of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance, expressed her great interest and appreciation of the work being done by the alliance in Atlanta. Miss Smith, who is assistant to the vice president in charge of personnel matters of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, with headquarters in New York, was formerly supervisor of the Atlanta public schools and later in the personnel department of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph company.

After going over the results of the study which the alliance has been making of the business and professional opportunities open to trained women in Atlanta, which is to be published shortly, Miss Smith said: "This study meets a need which I have felt so often in connection with my work. So few young women realize the many opportunities open to them today, or how to go about preparing for such opportunities. Such vocational information should be given especially to the young people in our schools and colleges who are preparing for their life work, to help them make a wise choice of occupations. I still consider Atlanta my home and I am glad that such an organization is here to help the girls of Atlanta and Georgia solve their vocational and educational problems."

Missionary Union Plans Meetings.

The Woman's Missionary union of Western Heights Baptist church will meet Wednesday afternoon, November 11, at the church for the missionary program. All the members are urged to be present and there will be special music and an interesting program.

On Tuesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. Homer Hilderbrand, 79 Neal street, there will be a "kids" party given by Circle No. 1. The public is invited. There will be games, contests, readings and music that both grown people and children will enjoy.

Twenty-five cents admission will be charged grown-ups and children will be admitted free.

At the home of Mrs. S. H. Ransbothan, November 2, the ladies of the W. M. U. met to study the book, "Women and Stewardship," taught by the pastor, Rev. Albert.

South Atlanta District Makes Good Progress

The Woman's Missionary societies of the South Atlanta district met at Grant Park Methodist church in the fourth quarterly meeting of the year. It was thought to be the best and most helpful meeting ever held and the entire program showed careful and thoughtful preparation on the part of Mrs. J. C. White, the district secretary.

The following interesting facts were brought out during the day:

Austell, Fairburn, Lakewood Heights and Stewart Avenue are the auxiliaries that have paid their Bennet Memorial pledge in full for 1925.

Eight group meetings have been held this quarter in the interest of the work. Mrs. J. C. White attended all of them.

One new scholarship for Brevard Institute at Brevard, N. C., has been undertaken. It is to be supported by the Young Matrons' class of the Martha Brown Memorial church, Mrs. Leo Sudderth, teacher.

Mrs. J. C. White knows a young girl who is very much in need of a scholarship at Brevard or Vashti.

Mrs. E. W. Brogdon announced there is one scholarship to the Scarritt college for Christian workers now available.

The Park street young people have paid in full their pledge to the Edna Reed Striplin scholarship at Scarritt.

The district has a new life member. Little David Allen Wells was introduced to the body. He is the infant son of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Wells, of Hapeville. Every child in their family is a life member of the missionary society.

This district has 900 women engaged in mission study and 1,202 studying the Bible in a definite way.

The amount of money raised by the women of this group in the third quarter which closed October 1 was $6,844.54.

Interesting Items From Athens Church.

Promotion day for the Junior Missionary society was a most interesting occasion held recently in the church. Ten members of the baby division, who had been promoted, were welcomed into the junior society and 10 juniors, who had already passed their 14th birthdays, were regretfully promoted out of this society into the young people's group. Mrs. E. D. Alexander is the new superintendent for 1926.

Circle No. 6 has completed the crocheted bedspread that is to be sent as a love gift to the Bennett Memorial building.

Circle No. 6 of the Women's Missionary society served a banquet Monday evening, to which all business women of the church were invited.

Miss Bess Combs, field worker for the Woman's council of the M. E. church, south, spoke at First church in the evening service on Sunday, October 25. Delegations from Madison, Gainesville and Oconee street united with the young people of this church in the service.

MRS. BESSIE L. JOHNSON.

Baptist Women of Georgia Meet in Macon This Week

In addition to the regular program of the Baptist Woman's Missionary Union State convention, which meets in Macon November 10-12, there will be a number of departmental conferences.

On Wednesday morning from 9 to 9:50 there wil be a most important conference of the associational superintendents, directed by Mrs. E. K. Overstreet, of Sylvania, Ga. All divisional vice presidents are urged to attend and any other women who care to be present will be welcome.

The divisional vice presidents have planned their own conference, the time and place to be announced from the rostrum.

Mrs. Taul White, of Rome, Ga., state chairman of mission study, will preside over her conference on Thursday morning from 9 to 9:50.

The stewardship conference will be in charge of Mrs. W. W. Stark, state chairman, of Commerce, Ga., Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

Personal service conference will be held by Mrs. W. S. Lawson, state chairman, Thursday morning at 9 at 202 Clisby place, Macon. Young People's conference, led by Miss Julia Allen, state Young People's leader, will be held Thursday at 9 a. m.

Happily are the young people of Macon planning for the coming of the convention of the Georgia Baptist Women's Missionary union. One entire session of the convention has been given to young people's auxiliaries and they will present on Wednesday evening at 8:15 o'clock a beautiful pageant, written by Miss Juliette Mather, of Birmingham, Ala., who is young people's leader for the entire southern W. M. U.

This pageant, "An Open Window to the World," is under the direction of Mrs. Martin A. Wood, of the Vineville Baptist church, where the convention sessions will be held and promises to be one of the clearest and most convincing portrayals of the purpose and ideals of W. M. U. Young People's work.

Miss Juliette Mather Again Visits Georgia.

Among the out-of-town guests who will attend the convention of Georgia Baptist Women's Missionary union in Macon, Miss Juliette Mather is outstanding. The announcement that she will appear on Wednesday evening in the Young People's pageant brings delight to the hearts of all the delegates and the women are eagerly anticipating her message on Thursday morning.

It will be of interest to Georgia Baptist women to know that Miss Mattie Summers, of Kwei Lin, China, and Miss Alrada Gunn, of Shin Hing, China, have just arrived in America and are at home in Newnan and Crawfordsville, respectively. They will attend the W. M. U. convention this week in Macon.

Among those who will go from Atlanta to the Baptist W. M. U. convention in Macon this week are: Mrs. George Westmoreland, Mrs. E. C. Laird, Mrs. A. B. Adair, Mrs. Harry Ethridge, Mrs. J. L. Phippin, Mrs. B. L. Bugg, Mrs. L. O. Freeman, Mrs. I. B. Smith, Mrs. R. K. Redwine, Mrs. Sandifer, Mrs. C. W. King, Mrs. McMahon and Miss Julia Allen.

Japanese Bishop Fills Pulpit.

The pulpit of All Saints' Episcopal church was filled last Sunday morning by a distinguished messenger from Japan, Rt. Rev. I. S. Motoda, bishop of Tokio.

Bishop Motoda gave a graphic presentation of the steady growth of the Episcopal church in Japan despite hindrances which would most likely have driven less valiant spirits to hopeless discouragement. But to those brave soldiers of the cross who took its message into the darkness of heathen lands beyond the sea, difficulties but spurred them forward and today the Episcopal church not only has a splendid representation of American and English bishops, as well as clergymen but also two native bishops and many priests. These bishops occupy the diocese of Tokio and the diocese of Osaka.

Bishop Motoda had been in attendance upon the Episcopal convention in New Orleans where he was received with signal honor.

New charm, new beauty by a morning drink

Do you realize how much beauty how much charm depends on inner cleanliness?

Do you know how poisons and wastes in the system affect your complexion, your fitness, your vivacity?

Then do this in the morning—or any time—when you know that poisons need elimination. Drink a glass of water, hot or cold. Add a little Jad Salts. It will make a sparkling drink.

The effect is to flush the intestines in a way pleasant, prompt and gentle. Results usually appear in an hour. And they come from the acids of lemon and grape combined with lithia, etc.

Don't wait for delayed effects. Keep at your best. Correct wrong conditions quickly.

AN OPERATION AVOIDED

DO you know that many of the common ailments of women produce symptoms similar to those for which operations are necessary? If you are suffering from inflammation, pains, swellings, bearing-down feeling with backache, and if you are run-down and in a weakened condition, an operation may be avoided.

Georgia Scores Brilliant Victory Over Auburn

Scrappy Moore Outshines Comrades With 71-Yard Run In Bulldogs' 34-to-0 Win

BY JULIAN GRIFFIN,
Staff Correspondent of The Constitution.

Columbus, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Tradition, an element seldom cherished in an age of modernism, was utterly ignored this afternoon by the Georgia Bulldogs as they swept to a 34-to-0 victory over the Auburn Tigers at the new Memorial stadium here.

An unwritten law between these rivals demands that one touchdown per game is sufficient, but to this the Bulldogs were oblivious.

Scrappy Moore, Buster Kilpatrick and the rest of that long list of backs from Athens skirted Auburn's ends and cut in off-tackle for numerous and lengthy gains. And when it came to hurling the pigskin through the ether, the tossers were unsurpassed in their accuracy and two or three men wearing red jerseys were always clear and ready to receive.

The contest was the initial one staged in the magnificent memorial stadium, one of the finest football plants in the south. About 10,000 fans were assembled in the concrete "U." The playing field is perfectly sodded with Bermuda, and, with a fresh haircut, the grass and dry weather furnished the best playing conditions the Bulldogs have encountered this season.

Score Indicates Strength.

The weather was too warm for what is termed "ideal football weather," but the players did not seem to suffer and the spectators enjoyed it immensely.

This was one game in which the score fairly well indicated the difference in the strength of the two teams. Georgia, though not scoring in the first period, advanced the ball toward the Tiger goal for seven first downs. They came in midfield, however, and the Tigers managed to hold when Georgia was deep in their own territory.

Auburn was playing a brand of ball that has characterized the Tiger plan of attack for years. Its line was stronger than the one from Athens, and the Tigers evidently were bent on wearing the Bulldogs down. But Coach Woodruff had no idea of allowing a thing like that. He sent in substitutes as frequently as ever Knute Rockne shifted men, and each player seemed as capable of filling the position as the man he relieved. This was Georgia's strongest advantage.

The Bulldogs made a total of 23 first downs, as compared with six for Auburn. Georgia was penalized nine

RHINOCK WINS LOUISVILLE FEATURE

Louisville, Ky., November 7.—(AP) Given a rousing ride by E. Scobie, Park View's stables' Rhinock won the Goldenrod handicap, with $5,000 added, at Churchill Downs this afternoon. His time for the seven furlong sprint was 1:23 3-5. My Colonel finished second and Great Sport nosed out the tiring Bumpkin for show money.

Rhinock, the favorite, paid $8.60 to win, $4.40 to place and $3.40 show on a $2 pari-mutuel ticket. My Colonel paid $6.30 and $3.90, and Great Sport, $3.90.

The race was worth $6,440 to Mrs. George B. Cox, owner of Park View stables.

The race, feature on get-away day, was run in a driving rain and over a track deep in mud. Rhinock broke from the outside, lost ground in the first quarter and then came forward with a burst of speed and won going away. My Colonel was a factor throughout, but had nothing in reserve to forestall the winner's rush. Great Sport started well, fell back and came strong at the end.

The original entry list of 14 was trimmed to 10 at post time when four horses were scratched.

SEWANEE WINS, 10 TO 9, FROM U. OF MISS.

Chattanooga, Tenn., November 7.—(AP)—Sewanee won a fiercely-played, even game from University of Mississippi here this afternoon, 10 to 9, Mississippi failing on an attempted forward pass to score its point after a touchdown. Gibbons made Sewanee's touchdown a minute after the game started, on a 55-yard run around end. Todd place-kicked the extra point. Mississippi, through plunges by Cohen, Martin and Biles kept the ball in Sewanee territory for the first of the first half but Allen's placement goal from the 25-yard line was the only result. In the third period, Sewanee resumed the offensive. Mahoney drop-kicked a field goal from the 18-yard line early in the fourth period.

A Sewanee pass intercepted by Burke gave Mississippi the ball on Sewanee's 32-yard line near the close of the fourth period and Mississippi ploughed to a touchdown, Cohen going the last 10 yards in one spectacular plunge. The big fullback was the outstanding player of the Ole Miss team, while Kent led Sewanee's defense and Gibbons' twisting end runs were the team's best assets on attack.

Petrels Beat Citadel, 7 to 0, As Sheppard and Walsh Star

BY CLIFF WHEATLEY.

Opportunity, who knocks once and passes on, they say, rapped gently at first on the front door of the Oglethorpe Petrels at Spiller Field Saturday; then she mangled her pretty hands in a frantic effort to gain recognition and finally she had to threaten to tear down the house before the Petrels would accept a 7 to 0 victory over The Citadel and continue in the race for a second S. I. A. A. football championship.

Three times in the opening quarter Opportunity placed a touchdown on a silver platter and begged the Petrels to help themselves.

"Not hungry," the Petrels remarked after lugging the oval from their own 33-yard tape to The Citadel's one-inch line, where it was lost on downs.

"Don't want any," chirped the Petrels upon recovering a fumble on The Citadel's 14-yard line.

"Oh, well, if you insist," yawned the Petrels after recovering another fumble a few seconds later on the Bulldogs' 5-yard line.

Sheppard Goes Over.

Whereupon, White rammed the forward wall for four yards in two plunges and Sheppard carried the ball over on the third down. Walsh kicked goal and the scoring was over.

Opportunity promptly fainted from sheer exhaustion and had to be carried from the field. She did not appear again and will probably resign her job of telling folks when the iron is hot.

In the first few moments of play, the Bulldogs were far from impressive. The Petrel backfield, minus its biggest guns, Adrian Maurer and "Nutty" Campbell, was gaining plenty of ground and the wise ones nodded their heads, winked knowingly and settled back to enjoy the massacre.

After the first exchange of punts the Petrels found themselves in possession of the ball on their own 33-yard marker. Walsh skirted left end for 17 yards and a beautiful piece of running it was, too. After being held for three downs, Walsh again broke loose, this time for 27 yards around right end and the ball was in scoring distance, with the Bulldogs showing little defensive ability.

Fake Kick Fools Citadel.

White plunged through the line for two and added three in the same spot. Sheppard was held but The Citadel was completely fooled by a fake kick, which turned into a forward pass, Walsh to Garlington, for a 10-yard gain. With goal to go, the Petrels hammered off their heads against a brick wall and lost the ball one inch from goal. Berry punted out to The Citadel's 40-yard line and Campbell

ANSLEY PARK CLUB GIVES TROPHIES

Members of the Ansley Park Golf club entertained at their annual dinner Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Biltmore hotel. The club is divided into two teams, the first being captained by the president, William M. Huntt, and the second by C. M. Fredrick, vice president of the club. The second team was the loser in the recent tournament and was host to the first team.

Trophies of the year won and presented were as follows:

T. T. Williams, club champion, an engraved loving cup and gold medal; George Edmondson, runner-up in championship flight, silver medal; L. W. Granado, first flight, silver medal; R. B. Traweek, second flight, silver medal; George H. Rover, third flight, silver medal; Wilson Green, fourth flight, silver medal; H. C. Nowell, low medalist, silver medal; bogy tournament, William V. Moore, silver medal; Independance Day tournament, Johnny Greene, class A, silver medal, and Joseph Horacek, class B, silver medal.

Sixty members of the club and several invited guests were present.

YALE RALLIES AND SWAMPS MARYLAND

New Haven, Conn., November 7.—(AP)—After completely baffling Yale with a whirlwind attack in the first half, which it led, 14 to 10, the strong Maryland tenm was swamped by the Elis in the closing periods when Yale rolled up five touchdowns to win, 43 to 14, here today. The Elis started a substitute team which soon fell before the southern offensive and permitted Linkous, Black and Gold back, to cross the Blue goal in the first few minutes of play. Tenney kicked goal.

The substitutes managed to tie the score before the first period ended, aided by Stone's 65-yard run after receiving Beatty's kick-off. Stone made the touchdown and Wadsworth kicked the goal.

The Eli second team took the lead when Wadsworth drop-kicked from the southern 40-yard line squarely between the posts, but later they were in hot water when 25-yard penalties and several flashy off-tackle plays by Linkous and Besley carried the ball to Yale's five-yard line. At this point the Eli regulars were sent in but were unable to stop the assault. Linkous scored his second touchdown and Maryland took the lead, 14 to 10, Tenney adding the point after touchdown.

Yale took the lead again after the intermission when it received the kick-off and marched 65 yards for another touchdown.

Kline made the score and Allen kicked goal.

In the final period the storm of the Yale attack broke loose in all its fury and rolled up four touchdowns. Three of these were made by Bill Kline. The last touchdown was made by Jerry Wadsworth after a forward pass, Kline to Fishwick, had put the ball on the southerners' 51-lard line. Wadsworth kicked the goal.

MISSOURI U. PUSHES TO TITLE

St. Louis, November 7.—(AP)—The University of Missouri Tigers continued their march toward another Missouri valley football championship by downing the Washington University Pikers today, 14 to 0. Missouri scored touchdowns in the second and fourth periods.

Substitute Back Dashes 55 Yards To Touchdown After Teams Play Evenly

BY JOHN STATON,
Special Correspondent of The Constitution.

Nashville, Tenn., November 7.—(Special.)—Dick Wright and his fleet heels were right here today and therein lies the story of Georgia Tech's victory, by a score of 7 to 0, over the Vanderbilt Commodore. It was no marked difference of ability between Tech and Vanderbilt. It was the sheer spectacular run of Tech's reserve ace that turned what apparently would have been a scoreless tie to a Tornado victory. That run, 55 yards down the gridiron, came to gladden Tech hearts in the fourth period.

Without warning that dash came, dazzling Vandy with its brilliance. Wright was substituted for Tech's captain, Wycoff, about the middle of the last period. When the substitution was made the ball was in Vandy's possession. Shortly afterward Bryan kicked 35 yards, and Wright allowed the ball to fall dead. Murphy then gained one yard through right tackle.

On the next play Wright received the ball for the first time. With a man ahead, he split right tackle and drove past the line of scrimmage. A clear field opened up, but he had no interference left, and Vandy men swarmed around him on every side. Dick dodged two, outran two, and then headed straight for Gil Reese, the safety man. About the 15-yard line the contact came. Gil dived, Dick made a mighty sidestep, and use of the straight arm. Gil fell short and Dick scurried on the goal.

Run Came Unexpectedly.

That run came when least expected, and saved Tech from an inevitable tie. With the exception of that touchdown, the teams played up and down the field with practically equal ability.

Each team created for itself one glorious opportunity to score. Tech's came in the second period when Wycoff and Barron made three successive downs. Wycoff was gaining nicely around the flanks on this drive, and Red found a beautiful hole over left tackle. Linemen were opening up holes in the line large enough to drive a wagon train through, twice during this drive Barron was pulled to earth by Reese, playing safety.

Near the goal line, Vandy stiffened and Tech lost the ball on downs. Vandy seriously threatened in the latter part of the second quarter. Reese, the most constant menace that any southern team possesses, began to slip outside the ends for good gains. Vandy carried the ball to Tech's 22-yard line and here resorted to the passing game. Passes were ineffective and Vandy also lost the ball on downs.

Ball Punted 28 Times.

Excepting these two drives neither team could feature any sustained ground gaining. The general routine was to run three plays and kick. During the game the ball was punted 28 times, from that figure one may gain some idea as to the trend of the play. In its general character the game was

CLIFF MARKLE BOUGHT BY CRACKERS

The first move to strengthen the pitching staff of the Crackers was made Saturday when Cliff Markle was purchased by President Dan Michalove from the St. Paul American association team for $5,000.

Markle, a right-hander of great ability, has served several teams in the major leagues after having been developed here by the late Charley Frank. He first was tried out by the New York Yankees, but failed to stick. Later he went to the Cincinnati Reds, but again failed to show big league caliber and was sent to St. Paul. He was sold last summer to the Yankees, but declined to make the transfer, declaring he did not care to again try to pitch for a major league club, and asked that he be sent again to the Southern league.

KANSAS, OKLA. PLAY 0-0 TIE

Norman, Okla., November 7.—(AP) Using every conceivable trick, Kansas university and Oklahoma university gridiron elevens battled to a scoreless tie on Owens field here this afternoon.

Neither side made much progress in the third period and the game ended as Mackie, left half, raced to Oklahoma's 18-yard line after intercepting a pass.

PRINCETON SWAMPS HARVARD, 36 TO 0, IN CLASSIC

Forward Passing Offensive Of Tiger Features Game; Jake Slagle Shining Star

BY FRANK GETTY.

Palmer Stadium, Princeton, N. J., November 7.—The Princeton Tiger chewed up John Harvard Saturday and mangled the remains in the greatest footbal triumph the Orange and Black ever has enjoyed over the Crimson.

When the final whistle blew and joyous Princetonians swarmed down out of the stands for the dance of victory, the score board recorded the final result:

Princeton, 36; Harvard, 0.

Never in the history of Harvard-Princeton games, which has been played since 1877, has there been such an overwhelming, one-sided victory as this.

The score tells only part of the story, for the Crimson was hopelessly outclassed in every department of play and the Tiger had ceased to roar and just frisking about kittenishly, still scoring almost at will when the game ended.

Slagle Princeton Star.

Harvard has only the memory of a gallant stand in the third quarter to comfort the Crimson cohorts as they trail their colors through the dust of this old revolutionary town, headed back to the elms of Cambridge.

Princeton is singing of the glory of Slagle, the one and only Jake, who passed and ran and kicked and piled up practically single-handed an oppressive lead over the helpless and bewildered visitors; of Dignan and Caulkins, McMillan and Len, heroes of the Tiger team in its hour of triumph.

Then, after it seemed that the slaughter had ceased, there blew into the game a veritable tonado named Prendergast, who ripped his way through the faltering Crimson line, and made possible an almost unnecessary touchdown at the very end of the game.

Score on Blocked Punt.

To make the triumph more complete, there was also the familiar incident of the loose ball, the alert Princeton linesman, the scoop and run for a touchdown which has featured clashes of the Crimson and Orange and Black in years gone by.

A young Jerseyman named Darby, reputed slow of foot but long on muscle, went into the game in place of Rosengarten, broke through at the start of the fourth quarter and blocked a Harvard punt. The ball bounded crazily a few chalk lines from the Crimson goal posts, and Darby, recovering from a staggering blow on the chest, snatched it up, sidestepped a couple of Harvard tacklers, and lurched over for a touchdown.

For the most part, which was also the first part, it was just a case of too much Slagle.

The game was not three minutes' old and the echoes of the throbbing songs of Princeton and Harvard cheering sections had barely given way to the booming of punts and the thud of flying cleats before this great Tiger back had forward-passed his team to an advantageous position and shot through the line for the first of the afternoon's succession of touchdowns.

Three Passes Score Touchdown.

Three Princeton forward passes, thrown by Slagle and neatly handled on the receiving end by Dignan and Caulkins, were completed in the making of this touchdown, to the complete bewilderment of Harvard.

Slagle's educated toe, which rates as highly as his flying legs and sturdy accurate throwing arm in the Princeton offense, added the point that followed the first touchdown.

Another phase of Princeton superiority was demonstrated a moment later. Slagle kicked off to Miller, the 190-pound halfback, who had replaced Maher in the Harvard backfield. Two Tiger linesmen tackled Miller so savagely that he dropped the ball and a Princeton man fell on it.

Dignan ripped through center for 13 yards, and he and Slagle added five more. At this stage of the game, Bradford, the alert Harvard wing man, knocked down a Tiger pass, the first that had not been completed up to this stage of the proceedings.

"Very well," growled the Tiger, "if you intend to interfere with our passes, we'll just show you another way to score."

Slagle Boots Field Goal.

Jake Slagle booted a perfect drop-kick over the cross bar from the 25-yard line for three more points.

From this point on until the end of the first half the Tiger gave Harvard no peace. The Crimson did not make a single first down in the first half and achieved but one during the entire game, while Princeton made 10 first downs.

The second Tiger touchdown came as a result of an intercepted pass. Jake Slagle plucked a long heave by Cheek out of the air near midfield and sprinted through the broken field to the Harvard nine-yard line. A succession of line bucks finally found Dignan with his face ground into the mud, clutching the ball just across the last white line. Slagle's kick added another point.

In the middle of the second quarter, after an exchange of punts, Slagle, standing on his own 20-yard line, threw a long pass to Caulkins. The Princeton quarterback reversed his field and ran to the Harvard 15-yard line before he was pulled down from behind.

Dignan Scores Third.

From this point after the Crimson line had stiffened and stopped Dignan on two rushes, Slagle again passed to Caulkins, who was brought down three yards from the goal line.

Dignan smashed through right tackle for the third touchdown, and Slagle again added a point with a drop-kick.

When Jake trotted from the field to rest up a few minutes later, the Princeton stand rose in a wild outburst of cheering to greet the great back.

Coming into the second half, Harvard, with the exhortation of her coaches stinging in their ears, braced and fought stubbornly. The Tiger backs could not gain; passes began to go to the ground, and Crosby, Harvard's left halfback, even achieved the one Crimson first down of the game.

But the visitors were getting mixed up in their signals and had nothing to show in the way of a dangerous attack. The third period was scoreless, but early in the fourth, after Harvard had taken the ball on downs on its own 32-yard line, Bob Darby did his stuff.

Darby Stars for Tigers.

Brushing aside a couple of Harvard linesmen, he plunged through just as Coady, the visiting fullback, was getting off a punt. Darby hurled his broad chest in the way, staggered, pounced upon the ball, and lumbered over for the fourth Tiger touchdown. This was not converted.

The fifth and final score came just as the sun set behind the Nassau hills, leaving a glow of victory for Princeton, but only the shadows of gloom for Harvard.

MICH. LOSES, 3 TO 2, TO N. W. U.

Chicago, November 7.—(AP)—Mire that was ankle deep, rain that streamed from sullen skies, partial darkness that shrouded the swimming gridiron, and a cruel wind that tossed punts back almost in the face of the kicker were the agencies of nature that played leading parts in Northwestern's 3-to-2 defeat of Michigan at Grant Park stadium today.

It was Michigan's first defeat and the first time this year the Wolverines have been scored on.

Truly, it was a weird game, players in rubber pants; a ball so mud-soaked that on two occasions it could not be passed from center to punter; punts that twice fell 10 yards from the line of scrimmage; fumbles that were so frequent that officials might well have become dizzy determining which team had the ball; and the whole a gray picture of 22 mud-covered gladiators, sliding, ploughing and sometimes almost swimming toward objectives that never were reached.

A sardonic nature worked the strings and the players were the puppets.

First there was the gale . . . at Northwestern back in the first period. It laid strong hands on Lewis' first punt and carried it 58 yards to Michigan's 4-yard line. Nature laughed again when the ball, slippery from a veneer of mud, slid from Friedman's arms as he took the punt. A Northwestern player fell on it.

Northewestern found the Michigan line adamant and again sought to enlist nature's aid. Lewis fell back and place-kicked, the ball sailing with the wind squarely between the goal posts, and the heretofore inviolate Michigan had been scored on. Northwestern gave Michigan a score in the third period, when Lewis stood behind his own goal line, and seeing the Michigan line charging through the slough toward him, chose to down the ball rather than chance a blocked kick, a Michigan recovery and a Michigan touchdown.

And thus the farce, enacted in deadly earnest, ended.

Glimpses of Petrels' Victory Over Citadel

PETRELS BEAT CITADEL, 7 TO 0

returned the compliment by shooting a short punt to the Bulldogs' 15-yard line.

On the first play, Blanding, Bulldog quarterback, fumbled and Justus recovered for Oglethorpe on The Citadel's 14-yard line. Surely now, the experts figured, the Petrels would show the offensive power that had buried the Centre Colonels under an avalanche of touchdowns, but the Bulldogs' defense stiffened again and the ball went over on The Citadel's 6-yard line.

The Petrels now looked for a kick out, but Blanding thought a plunge through the middle of the line was the right idea and another fumble resulted, Cousins recovering for Oglethorpe on the Citadel's five-yard tape. Too much was simply too much; the Bulldogs had nothing left for a third stand and in three plays the winning touchdown had been registered.

Rough Going for Both.

The remainder of the way the traveling was rough for both elevens, although neither came through with anything that resembled a serious threat until well in the fourth quarter when Maurer went back to his old trick of gaining ground for the Petrels and when the Bulldogs uncorked some likely-looking forward passes.

Absence of Maurer and Campbell from the Petrel lineup at the start caused some concern, as the Bulldogs brought with them a record which stamped them as worthy foes, but Walsh proved quite a sensation during the time he was in harness and Garlington directed the play as if he had been doing it all of his life.

It was not until the start of the second quarter that Maurer and Campbell were sent into the fray, so the laurel wreath of victory isn't going to be placed on brows that have worn it so often in this season of Oglethorpe achievement, for the old guard had nothing at all to do with it.

Instead, it's going to Walsh, whose sensational off-tackle runs in the first quarter put the ball in striking distance; it's going to Justus and Cousins, who were right on hand to take advantage of the Bulldogs' misfortunes and it's going to Sheppard, who made up his mind that he wasn't to be stopped on that final dash for the winning marker. Good men, those, and you'll hear more of them as the season draws to a close and the road to glory gets rougher.

Petrels Outplayed Citadel.

Bulldog supporters are going to blame "the breaks" for the defeat of their heroes, and they did play a most important role, but cold statistics of the encounter prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Petrels outplayed the gallant Carolinians in practically every department of the game.

In the matter of first downs, for instance, the Petrels more than doubled the number compiled by their opponents, making 13 to the six garnered by the Bulldogs. Attacking power of each team was stronger in the first half than in the second, eight of the Petrels' first downs and four of the Citadel's coming in the first half.

Oglethorpe, sailing serenely under a 7-point lead that looked bigger and bigger as the battle went on, was not in desperate need of showing any forward passing game, completing one out of three attempts for a gain of nine yards. The Citadel, on the other hand, tried 13 passes, two of which were completed for a total gain of 54 yards. Eight of her passes were grounded and the Petrels intercepted three.

Running plays netted the Petrels 244 yards, while the Bulldogs went around and through Oglethorpe for but 117 yards.

No, sir, statistics of the game don't leave much solace for those who are going to credit "the breaks" with the defeat of as courageous a bunch of fighters as South Carolina ever sent out.

Small Crowd Sees Game.

Courageous and capable, too, was the impression the lads from Charleston made on a handful of gridiron fans, for the crowd wasn't at all what it should have been for a game which had an important bearing on the S. I. A. A. championship.

Especially courageous and capable were those war horses, Weeks and Berry, who shouldered the major portion of the Bulldogs' offense and defense. Weeks it was who made cold chills run up and down the spines of Oglethorpe rooters on the last play of the first quarter when he ripped through the Petrel line for 30 yards before being downed. Weeks it was who was on the firing end of two passes that threatened to spill the beans for Oglethorpe. Berry it was whose long punts were among the best that have been seen by Atlanta fans this season.

Leading ground gainers for the Petrels were Maurer, who netted close to 100 yards in line plunges and end runs; Walsh, with approximately 50 yards in off-tackle thrusts, and Sheppard with 40 yards from straight line plunges. Campbell was not called upon often in the three quarters he played, but his return of punts saved the Petrels many yards of hard plugging.

The longest sustained attack was supplied by the Petrels in their march from their own 35-yard line to the Citadel's one-inch tape. This march netted three first downs. In the fourth quarter the Petrels again compiled three first downs in a row, Maurer proving the principal actor in lugging the ball from Oglethorpe's 20-yard line to the Citadel's 40-yard stripe where it was lost on a fumble.

Citadel Best in Second Quarter.

The Bulldogs' best effort was delivered at the start of the second quarter, when they advanced from their own 25-yard line to the Petrels' 21, losing the ball when a drop-kick attempt failed. The Citadel lost another chance to score later in the quarter when Youngblood gained 35 yards on a forward pass from Weeks and had eluded the Oglethorpe safety man, only to be brought down from the rear by "Muggsy" Smith, Petrel substitute halfback.

Alabama Rats Snatch Win From Bullpups at Rome

Rome, Ga., November 7.—(Special.) The firm of Taylor and Reverra, working in the interest of Alabama freshman tide this afternoon changed a 13 to 0 defeat into a 14 to 13 victory, and Georgia's colors were again lowered to give place to the Red and White for the second time in as many years.

The Bullpups had the lead through three quarters, due to the brilliant toe of Johnson, playing quarterback, and the touchdown by Jacobson, after he had, himself, blocked an Alabama punt.

The first field goal of the Georgia star was for 45 yards. The first scoring of the Alabama team came in the fourth quarter after its forwards had opened up holes in the Georgia line, and with straight football the oval had been pushed to Georgia's five-yard line. The Georgia team held the Alabamans on the six-inch line.

Johnson, punting from behind his own goal line, sent the ball to the center of the field, where it was caught by Taylor, who, after dodging and twisting, placed the ball over the last while line.

In a few minutes with the ball on his own 10-yard line, Reverra caught it up and ran 65 yards, making the score 13 to 13. He then kicked goal for the extra point. Johnson, for Georgia, as a last effort tried a field goal to win, but the ball went wild and the game was lost 14 to 13.

MILLIGAN BEATS TENN. WESLEYAN

Athens, Tenn., November 7.—(AP)—Milligan swept Tennessee Wesleyan to a 32 to 0 defeat here today. The game was hard fought on even terms the first half. Led by the brilliant Thomason, the Buffaloes scored early in the second half. Barrow intercepted a pass and ran 96 yards to a touchdown. He and Adkinson swept the Wesleyan ends with scores in the final frame. Dennis featured in backing up the line. The entire Wesleyan team starred with their fight but were outclassed in the closing minutes of the game.

A. U. BEATEN BY MOREHOUSE

With memory of a defeat last year still in their minds Morehouse college outplayed and outfought Atlanta university yesterday in Atlanta's colored football feature, and Morehouse won, 7 to 0.

A pass over the goal line to Sammy Clark gave the Morehouse lads a touchdown and another pass over the goal line netted the extra point.

ALL NATIONALITIES ON CHINESE TEAM

Big Green Rises to Peak In Race for Eastern Title; Passes Aid in 62-13 Win

Hanover, N. H., November 7.—(By the Associated Press.)—With the "giant Swede" Oberlander starring in a spectacular air attack that swept all before it, Dartmouth bombed Cornell's football forces into submission today by the annihilating margin of 62 to 13.

Before a crowd of 15,000, Jess Hawley's big Green forward passed the red clad eleven into the worst defeat it has suffered in the five-year reign of "Gloomy Gil" Dobie. Simultaneously, Dartmouth, by its triumph over a foe which came with an unbeaten record lifted itself to the peak of the eastern championship heap. The victory broke the tie that existed up to today in the series with Cornell and squared accounts for the humiliating 59-7 defeat the Ithacans handed the Green in 1921. The Hanoverians now hold five victories to four for Cornell in the series that started twenty-five years ago.

Oberlander's bullet-like passes resulted in six of Dartmouth's nine touchdowns. Two others were accounted for personally by Oberlander, one on a 48-yard dash through most of the Cornell team and another on a one-yard dive through center, while the ninth and final tally was carried over by a substitute back, Starret, who intercepted a Cornell pass and raced 42 yards to score in the last quarter.

Passes Well Screened.

While Oberlander was the outstanding tower of strength in the Green onslaught, turning in a performance that seems to clinch his claims to all-American fame, the big blond backfield ace had a defensive screen for his amazing passes that was perfection itself while Lane, a running mate, and Tully and Sage, a bare-legged pair of remarkable ends, proved themselves unerring "ball hawks."

This trio of Green flashes, running wild through Cornell's defense, plucked the ball out of the air with uncanny accuracy as they darted to all corners of the field. At times they broke clear to grab the oval and race to the goal line unimpeded.

Dartmouth started a march down the field after Cornell received the kick-off and was held. A run of 25 yards by Oberlander was followed by a Cornell penalty and two forward passes, the second, Oberlander to Sage, enabling the latter to score. Tully kicked the extra point. A second touchdown resulted from another long forward pass, Oberlander to Lane, the latter scoring. Tulley again added the extra point.

Cornell Scores on Pass.

Cornell a moment later scored a touchdown on a long pass, Butterfield to Tilton, but Carey's kick for the extra point was blocked. Cornell's off tackle drive got into action and resulted in another touchdown. Carey added the extra point.

Early in the second period two long forward passes by Oberlander and a 12-yard end run by the same player gave Dartmouth another touchdown, the score resulting from the second pass received by Lane. Oberlander later went through center for a touchdown and scored a little later after a 48-yard run around right end. A pass from midfield by Oberlander to Lane, who ran 25 yards over the line gave Dartmouth its sixth touchdown. Tully kicked all three goals, making the score: Dartmouth 42, Cornell 13, at the half.

Tully Scores on Pass.

In the third period Oberlander threw a long pass to Tully who raced 15 yards far a touchdown. Tully also kicked the goal. The play was duplicated a few minutes later, Tully scoring on a 22-yard run after receiving a long pass from Oberlander and the score was 56 to 13.

Dartmouth scored its ninth touchdown in the final period when Starrett, sub fullback, intercepted a forward pass on Cornell's 42-yard line and ran over the line. McPhail's attempted goal for the extra point was blocked. This made the final score: Dartmouth 62; Cornell 13.

FATE FAVORS EVERETT SCOTT

BY IRWIN M. HOWE.

If money brings luck to Everett Scott, substitute shortstop for Washington team in the American league, is "it." When he received his world's series check from Commissioner Landis for $3,734 as part of the losers' end of the purse, he became the kingpin among world series financiers.

As a matter of fact Scott did not appear in the box score against Pittsburgh but because the Yankees set him adrift during the summer Scott had a chance to cut in on his sixth world series melon, without toting a bat to the plate.

So far as the number of series is concerned Scott shares the honors with "Stuffy" McInnis of Pittsburgh, Eddie Collins of the White Sox and Babe Ruth of the Yankees, each of whom has been in six series. It might be deduced that McInnis has been favored by luck as much as has a Scott considering that "Stuffy" was turned loose by a near tail-ender—only to hook up with champions, but there is a difference—Scott has the most money to his credit.

With the last check cashed Scott had banked $20,905 of world's series money since 1915, when he cut in on the winner's end with the Boston Red Sox. He remained with the champions from the Hub long enough to draw two more checks, both from the winner's end. Being transferred to New York he got his share of the loser's end in 1922 but averaged it up pretty well by drawing down the biggest purse on record—$6,143—in the world series of 1923. Then came his sixth cut-in this season.

Ruth Is Next.

Ruth is nearest to Scott in total amount with $20,681, the two having shared in five out of the six series. Scott was not in on the purse in 1921 and Babe lost out this season.

Collins has pulled down $17,793. His shares were more evenly distributed than either Scott's or Ruth's, his lowest being almost exactly $1,000 more than Scott's and Ruth's smallest. The minimum amount to go to Collins was $2,031 in 1914 as part of the losers' end between the Athletics and Braves. Scott received only $1,102 as his part of the winner's end in the war year of 1918, Ruth also sharing in the purse this year, for the smallest amount on record.

Collins grabbed off most of the money with the Athletics, being counted in on the series of 1910, 1911, 1913 and 1914. Eddie was in on the winner's end for the White Sox against the Giants in 1917 and got a loser's share in the Chicago-Cincinnati games of 1919.

Ruth swelled his bank account while with Boston in 1915, 1916 and 1918 and with the Yankees in 1921, 1922 and 1923 for a total of $20,681.

McInnis won his first extra purse in 1910, the same year that Collins drew down his, both being on Connie Mack's team. His other winning years while with the Athletics paralleled those of Collins and his next came with the Red Sox in 1918. Then came his fortunate switch this year, his final check making the total read $17,445. His biggest check was $5,332 this year. Collins' best was $3,654 in 1911, with Scott's and Ruth's biggest $6,143 in 1923.

RICHMOND WINS FROM GORDON

Augusta, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—Richmond Academy advanced a notch nearer the state championship by defeating the Gridders from Gordon Institute 14 to 0 here today. The academy outfought and outgeneralled the visitors throughout the game, their goal line never being in danger while Bruce and Mulberin, of the local Cadets, crossed the last chalk line for Richmond scores.

W. and L. Generals Blast Virginia's Conference Title Hopes

Camera Shots From Georgia's Crushing Victory Over Auburn in Columbus Classic

Tide Rolls Up 31-to-0 Win Over Wildcats as Brown Stars in 79-Yard Dash

Birmingham, Ala., November 7.—(By the Associated Press.)—Alabama's Crimson Tide surged to victory in a game with Kentucky here today by a score of 31 to 0 and the Wildcats met their first defeat of the season. Alabama, as a consequence, moved one game closer to a possible repetition of her 1924 performance—winning of the southern conference championship.

A 79-yard run by Mack Brown in first period, followed by goal kicked netted Alabama the first touchdown. Buckler previously had kicked from placement from the eight-yard line for three points.

The field was fast during the early part of the game, but a heavy rain set in. Before the end of the game the rain had stopped.

Barnes raced 77 yards in the second period for a touchdown after picking up the ball on Ross' fumble. The extra try left the score 17 to 0 at the end of the second period.

On a triple fake pass Mack Brown went off left tackle for 10 yards and a touchdown in the third period. Buckler kicked goal for the extra point. Next Hubert rammed left guard for a lone foot and a touchdown in the final quarter. Another goal kicked by Buckler made the final score 31 to 0.

Mahney, by his many returns, and Ross, by his punting, played the star roles for the Kentuckians.

Gillis' toe work, Mack Brown's running and Hubert's goal kicks featured the Alabamians' game.

L. S. U. DEFEATS RICE, 6 TO 0

Baton Rouge, La., November 7.—(AP)—Abandoning the straight football that has marked its game throughout the season, Louisiana State University resorted to passing today to defeat Rice Institute 6 to 0 in a driving rain. It was a 25-yard pass from Stephens to Haynes who dashed the remaining 20 yards to Rice's goal line in the third quarters that brought victory to a much-damaged Tiger and joy to 3,000 fans who stood in the stands while a drenching rain beat down.

E. P. BEATEN BY JOE BROWN

Joe Brown Junior High school won from East Point yesterday by a 7 to 0 score, an East Point fumble giving the youngsters their touchdown.

In the first play of the game, Fellers, Joe Brown quarterback, broke his shoulder. His place was taken by Howard, who played a fine game.

East Point fumbled on its own 35-yard line, and Davis, Brown right end, snatched and raced the remaining distance for a touchdown. Howard drop-kicked goal. Davis, at end, and Butler, at half, both played well for Joe Brown. Butler's end runs being a feature of the game.

G. A. SCORES WIN OVER AUBURN

times, twice for 15 yards, but it did not slow up their attack. Auburn drew a couple of five-yard penalties.

Before delving into the intricate details of the affair, fleeting mention should be made of the manner in which Columbus people received the visitors. They have staged this annual affair 29 times in the past and are efficient in the art of putting on a game in big style.

All the non-partisans seemed neutral, except one-eyed Connelly, professional gate-crasher, who gained admittance disguised as a friend of the sport writer fraternity. One-eye had found a Georgia badge somewhere and since no one presented him with Auburn colors, he hung around the press box, wearing red and black calling out plays five minutes after they occurred and making his presence quite offensively known. The purpose of his honoring Columbus with a visit was to crash the gate of the Stribling-Cook fight in the evening.

Never Doubt of Winner.

From the second play of the game, when "Wee Willie" Hatcher, a bare-headed youngster, skirted left end for 15 yards, there was never any doubt of the outcome. Georgia has been playing a kaleidoscopic brand of ball this season and today was the Bulldogs. The one outstanding play of the game was executed by "Scrappy" Moore, who was playing the game of his life. In the final period, with Georgia in possession of the ball on the Bulldogs' own 29-yard line, Moore cut in off left tackle on a buck, reversed his field, and, with George Morton in front of him, raced 71 yards for the longest gain of the day and a touchdown.

Georgia used that play often with marked success. Luckie and Huff, tackles, gave splendid aid in making it work out, by taking out the forward charges of the Tigers. Willie Hatcher, had caused Kid Clay, Tech scout, to draw a diagram of it in the first quarter when he gained 38 yards to cross the goal only to have the play brought back and Georgia penalized.

In the second quarter Georgia turned loose and scored three touchdowns. A series of end runs and forward passes left Georgia with the ball on Auburn's 12-yard line, when the first period ended. Morton and Kilpatrick advanced two yards apiece and Morton took the ball around left end for the score, with Scrappy Moore running interference. Kain place-kicked goal after touchdown and the score for the first and last time read, Georgia, 7; Auburn 0.

Georgia supporters settled down comfortably in their seats and remarked: "Well, boys, there's that old annual touchdown. It's enough to win the game," and it was sufficient, but Georgia could not see it that way.

A precedent had been set by one team winning three games in a row for the first time in history, and the Bulldogs were determined to change the scheme of things generally.

Starting on their own 41-yard marker, Kilpatrick and Morton gained five and two yards, respectively. One of the 21 Georgia passes was tried here, Morton to Kain, and it netted 16 yards. Another pass was good for 12 yards and two or three short plays kept the ball rolling until McTigue got 12 yards at end and Morton skirted the other end for the remaining eight yards and the second touchdown.

Passes Constant Menace.

Georgia's sweeping aerial attack was a constant menace to the charges of Coach Morey. Of the 21 passes attempted by the Athens delegation, 11 were completed for 149 yards. Every man in the Bulldog backfield seemed adept at passing and everybody could catch them. This is in contrast to he Auburn attack from the air. Auburn tried to gain through the air 13 times, but succeeded in landing only four for 34 yards.

The Bulldogs snapped at the flanks of the Tiger consistently, going around the Auburn ends for a total of 232 yards.

Those Georgia ponies never seemed to grow weary. The answer for this may be found in the fact that Coach Woodruff used 35 substitutes, keeping a beaten trail from the sidelines to the referee.

One Georgia pass was intercepted by a Tiger, but the Bulldogs intercepted three Auburn passes in return. Georgia's penalties totalled 65 yards.

Captain Thompson Out.

Georgia punted eight times for an average of 35.4 yards, while Auburn kicked the same number of times to average 34.1 yards. While the Bulldogs were obliged to be thinking of the Tech game that lies just one week around the corner, they held none of their offense in reserve. Everything was turned loose. Captain Smack Thompson and Hollis were out with injuries, but the rest of the squad saw plenty of service and let out everything.

The game was also costly for the Bulldogs. "Buster" Kilpatrick, scintillating halfback, went down for the count in the latter stages of the game. His leg was injured and he had to be carried from the field. Tonight those in the Bulldog camp expressed the belief that he may be out for the rest of the season.

The first touchdown won the game and the second made it doubly certain. All others were superfluous. The third followed closely on the heels of the second. Salter intercepted a Bulldog pass and Auburn kept the ball long enough to register a first down before Mickie Kain intercepted a pass and ran it back 28 yards to give the ball to Georgia near midfield. An eight-yard gain was made by McTigue before Kain got away on the celebrated off tackle play for 46 yards to score. He then added the goal after touchdown, making the score 21 to 0.

Georgia Held in Third Quarter.

Georgia made three first downs in the third period but did not score. Early in the fourth quarter Moore slapped at an Auburn pass and knocked it into the waiting hands of Vangeissen, who ran it 35 yards to Auburn's 18-yard line. Morton was thrown for a five-yard loss, but on the next play Moore threw a pass to Morton, good for 23 yards and touchdown. Morton kicked the goal.

Kain caught the next kick off on his five-yard line and returned it 24 yards, placing the ball on Georgia's 29-yard line from where Scrappy Moore made his 71-yard sprint for a marker. Kain missed the goal and the final score was written, Georgia, 34; Auburn, 0.

Salter, Market and Green put up the best brand of ball for Auburn, while the whole Tiger team staged a relentless battle, although completely outclassed. Among the Georgia backs who may be regarded as dangerous might be mentioned Moore, Estes, Hatcher, Boland, Morton, Kilpatrick, McTigue, Broadnax, Kain and about a half dozen others.

Moore Attempts Drop Kick.

In addition to the brilliant all-round game of Scrappy Moore, the field general attempted to dropkick a field goal in the first quarter from Auburn's 46-yard line, but the ball struck the cross bar of the goal and bounded back. Which just goes to show what he is capable of doing with his toe in a close game.

If the Bulldogs play the same brand of ball displayed today next Saturday against Tech, we shudder to think of the ferocious battle that is inevitable.

TENN. DOCS BEAT BENNING

Memphis, Tenn., November 7.—(Special.) Playing under the most miserable of weather conditions, a rejuvenated University of Tennessee Doctors' football team confronted all productions and splashed and slipped its way to 7-to-0 victory over the infantry team of Fort Bening, Georgia, at Russwood park this afternoon. The playing field was more like a lake than a gridiron, water standing in pools all over the field and the mud being ankle keep in places. Rain fell unceasingly and uncomfortably throughout the game.

A twisting, squirming 32-yard run through the line by Sammy Sanders gave the doctors their lone touchdown in the third quarter, but the Tennesseeans' team outfought and outplayed the service team throughout the 48 minutes. The Docs performed as though they were a new team wiping out the stigma of four successive defeats and covering themselves with as much glory as they did mud and every man as unrecognizable from a plastering of earth.

Fort Benning, with two all-American stars in the lineup, defenders of the presidents' cup for service teams, seldom showed a threat of power before the vigorous defense of the Doctors and never worked the ball within the Doctors' 30-yard line. The infantry showed at a decided disadvantage under conditions more suitable to naval warfare. Smythe and McQuarrie, failing repeatedly, being stopped behind their line of scrimmage countless times.

DAVIDSON HELD TO 6-TO-6 TIE

Charlotte, N. C., November 7.—Sweeping down Wearn field for 67 yards in the third quarter the Hampden-Sydney eleven tied Davidson college, 6-6, today. The Virginia team was led by the brilliant running and receiving of passes by Atkins who scored the tieing touchdown. Davidson started the game with a strong offensive, scoring in the first quarter as Hendrix drove his team nicely. The play of Dudley for the Tigers was outstanding on the line.

Palmer Runs Brilliantly Through Mud to Touchdowns To Beat Old Dominion, 12-0

Lexington, Va., November 7.—(By the Associated Press.)—Mike Palmer, running brilliantly through a sea of mud, sent Virginia's hopes for the southern conference title aglimmering here this afternoon, shoved Washington and Lee to the front in the Dixie race and gave the Generals the 1925 championship of the Old Dominion. His broken field running carried the Generals through to a 12-to-0 victory over the Cavaliers. It was the third consecutive win for Washington and Lee in the four games played since the two institutions renewed relations.

Turned into a quagmire after a steady drizzle throughout the morning, Wilson field was no place for a championship battle and the much vaunted passing attacks of the two elevens were necessarily discarded in favor of line play. Broken field running was seemingly impossible, but not for the fleet General back, who dodged about perfectly at home in the mud that covered the players until they were unrecognizable.

Victors Get Breaks.

Breaks went to the victors, but it was not these that brought about the victory. The only purpose they served was to forestall the Orange and Blue. Washington and Lee rode through to her two touchdowns without the aid of breaks. Palmer crossing the Cavalier goal for the first touchdown after Wilson had dashed around end on a splendid run and the second tally was accounted for just 20 seconds before the close of the first half when Palmer grabbed down Caldwell's punt on Virginia's 40-yard line and carried it back over the slippery field until he had shaken off every Cavalier tackler and had crossed the last white mark. Rauber failed to make the point after touchdown in both cases.

Throughout the game the Generals held the upper hand and it was seldom that Virginia was within White and Blue territory. Never were they within scoring distance. Washington and Lee's line was a stone wall even in midfield where most of the Cavalier gains were made.

With the start of the third period Captain Diffey led his men to three straight first down but the advance was checked and in the advance the pilot was injured and forced to leave the game.

Palmer Shining Star.

Virginia fought gamely, her line showed power and all in all the play was pretty much on an equal basis except when Palmer registered a run. The little fellow on many occasions left as many as four Virginians strewn in the path he had trod. Rauber, too, was effective but the Orange and Blue line was capable of stemming material advances on his part.

Virginia's attack, built for an open field, was powerless to bring about consistent advances. Diffey and Walp contributing most of the advance off tackle drives. Captain Thomas played a great game on a wing, coming in time after time to check a Cavalier runner before he was well under way. Tilson and Davis were other stumbling blocks while Wilson and McVey both showed head work in running their machines.

For Virginia the play of Diffey and Walp in the backfield and Bramble, Abner and Cardwell in the line was outstanding.

TUSKEGEE BEATS STATE NORMAL

Montgomery, Ala., November 7.—(AP)—Tuskegee Institute defeated Alabama State Normal here today by a score of 14-0, thereby entering a strong claim for the southeastern negro conference championship.

The two teams battled on even terms for most of the game, the victors resorting to forward passes in the pinches. Several long heaves proved successful and put the ball in scoring distance three times, the visitors punching it across twice.

Stribling Wins Decision Over Cook in Columbus

Georgia Battler Scores Knockdown in Seventh But Joe Finishes on Feet

Columbus, Ga., November 7.—Young Stribling won a decision over George Cook, of Australia, in a ten-round bout here tonight at the Municipal Memorial stadium. Cook was floored in the seventh round but was able to finish the fight.

Cook made a very creditable showing against the Georgia boy, although he was unable to win a round. Newspapermen gave Stribling every round with the exception of the fourth, which was declared a draw.

Stribling was forced at times to extend himself, but held the edge over his opponent throughout. In the seventh round, however, he gave the Australian real trouble when he knocked Cook down. A right cross on Cook's jaw put the big boy on the mat. Up to that round, Stribling had been landing on Cook's midriff with stinging body blows in the infighting, weakening him considerably.

In the eighth Cook went back strong and finished the fight on his feet, winning the admiration of the fans.

Stribling weighed 175 and Cook 185.

Four thousand fans saw the fight and those who thought that Cook was a set-up were badly mistaken, for the Australian was in the fight throughout.

The bout, staged under the auspices of the local Charles S. Harrison post of the American Legion, was held at the new memorial stadium the same location in which the famous McTigue-Stribling fight was staged.

In the semi-final, Gene Poyner won a decision over Joe Coffman. They were lightweighis.

Timing by Number of Plays Success in Game, Is Claim

Providence, R. I., November 7.—(AP)—For the first time since the modern game of football was instituted, the method of timing provided by the rules was discarded and periods of plays instead of minutes were substituted in the game between Brown and Boston university here today.

Under the official sanction of the football rules committee, Brown and Boston university gave the system a tryout and, in the opinion of officials, coaches and spectators, the experiment was an unqualified success.

Brown Wins, 42-6.

Brown was the victor, 42 to 6, and at no stage of the game was there any question of the superiority of the home eleven, although the latter was for the greater part of the game composed almost entirely of substitutes.

Under the system agreed to by the coaches of the two elevens, the first two periods consisted of 40 plays, the last two 35. The elapsed time for the four periods was 27, 28, 21 1-2 and 26 1-4 minutes, respectively. The actual time by quarters was 14:20; 14:21; 13:50, and 13:45.

Harry R. Coffin, Harvard '94, co-organizer with R. W. P. Brown, Brown strategist, of the system which they seek to have incorporated in the official football rules, expressed entire satisfaction with the experiment:

Coffin's Statement.

Mr. Coffin said:

"The play system eliminates any suspicion of juggling of the time and stalling. It is particularly valuable in a final period when a losing team is likely to resort to a series of forward passes when all other attempts to gain have failed. Under the present system, every time there is an uncompleted forward pass, 25 seconds are lost. Under the play system, every forward pass, whether or not it is completed, counts as a play. In every respect it is a faster game, more satisfactory to officials, players and coaches and particularly the spectators."

Officials of the game expressed their satisfaction with the system and predicted it eventually would be adopted.

WRENS DEFEAT SWAINSBORO HI

Wrens, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Wrens High school's football team strengthened its claim to gridiron honors this year by defeating the hard-playing Swainsboro High team yesterday, 12 to 3. Early in the first quarter T. Wren, standing on his own 25-yard line, heaved a screened pass to Farmer, who raced 35 yards for the first touchdown.

In the second quarter a general mixture of football tactics placed the ball on Swainsboro's four-yard line. Swainsboro held the first attempt of the local lads to push the ball over, but on the second play H. Hilton made a well-executed dive for the needed yardage.

Only twice during the game did Swainsboro threaten the goal line of the home team. Once in the second quarter they carried the ball to the 20-yard line from which point a beautifully executed drop-kick sailed through the uprights.

U. S. B. BEATEN 14 TO 0, BY RIVERSIDE

Gainesville, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Riverside got sweet revenge from University school of Atlanta here this afternoon, when, aided largely by Red Bethea, big fullback, and Mutt Riddle, half, the Cadets won by a 14-to-0 score. Last year the educated toe of Tom Medlin turned in a 3-to-0 victory for the Bluebirds. This defeat by Riverside was the first handed to university by a G. I. A. A. team in two years.

The Bluebirds had a hard fighting team on the field, but Riverside clearly demonstrated that it had the stronger and more powerful team a few minutes after the beginning of the game. The Cadets took the kick-off in midfield and made a steady march to the Bluebirds' one-yard line, where the visitors' forward wall held like a stone wall, and Riverside was unable to score.

Both of the home team's touchdowns came in the second quarter. Bethea took the ball in mid-field after a Bluebird fumble had been recovered. Twisting and squirming through the U. S. B. team, this red-headed lad carted the oval the whole 50 yards for a touchdown. Riddle threw a pass over the goal line for the extra point. The second marker came a little later when Ferguson fumbled on his own 32-yard line and Riverside recovered. On the next play, Bethea slashed off-tackle for 20 yards, putting the ball on the 12-yard line. Wright then carried it over for the second score. Riddle drop-kicked goal.

The rest of the game was bitterly fought, with U. S. B. fighting under great odds and putting up a great game. The whole team was full of spirit and fight, but the brute strength of Riverside was too much for them.

This loss by U. S. B. puts the G. I. A. A. title in a worse muddle than ever before, with Lanier remaining as the only undefeated team. U. S. B. and Riverside are tied with one defeat apiece.

Left with Grant field all to themselves Saturday, Don Miller's Tech freshmen team swept to a 33-to-6 victory over the young Tigers from Sewanee. The two teams were left pretty much to themselves throughout the game, most of the fans who gathered at Grant field having their attention centered on the board giving the detail of the Tech-Vandy game in Nashville.

The Junior Tornado showed a great deal of drive and fight and was able to tear through the opposing line for big gains. This line-plunging attack was led by Bob Randolph, former Tech High star, and who held down fullback position yesterday. Time and again this young Jacket was sent at the line, and nearly every time he got through for a big gain, and many first downs for the Tech team resulted from this. Randolph, captain of the Frosh for the week, scored one of the five touchdowns.

Horn, at left half for the home team, was another back who gave the Tiger kittens plenty of trouble. Soon after the kick-off in the first quarter, Tech scored the first touchdown, after a steady march down the field with Horn lugging the oval most of the way, and making the touchdown. This youngster also scored two more touchdowns for the young Jackets.

Durant, a regular back, who was laid up last week with a sore leg, got into the game yesterday, and ripped off several nice gains, making one touchdown.

Parham, at left end, played his usual brilliant game for the Jackets, his defensive line play being a feature of the game. He was also getting his usual distance on punts, averaging around 55 yards per boot.

The visitors made their lone touchdown on a pass over the goal, the oval being thrown by Rice to Cartwell. Rice, who captains the Tigers, played a good game at left half.

WRIGHT STARS AS TECH WINS

defensive. Taking into consideration four full quarters, and each was crammed full of real football, it was the magnificence of the respective defences, rather than a collapse of the offenses which kept the score at its low level.

In this connection, two Vandy men stood head and shoulders above the field. They are Rives and Reese. Rives is a peer of tackles in southern football today. He is not too large, and has perfect control of every muscle. Rather would one attempt to move out the Rock of Gibraltar than box Rives on defense. The Rock of Gibraltar has no hands; Rives' two act like a couple of pistons. He protects himself perfectly, and can tackle from any conceivable position. His tackling is accurate and deadly. There is no question about his being perhaps the best-rounded tackle in the south.

Reese Main Defense.

Gil Reese played a spectacular defensive game, if any defensive game can be spectacular. On punts, time and time again he would block for a moment, then get down the field fast enough to tackle Wycoff in his tracks. Twice, he pulled Barron down when all others had failed. Yet Dick Wright made his touchdown through Rives and Reese. Rives left a small opening in the defensive line, and through this, Dick rammed. Gil Reese missed only one tackle all afternoon, and that was when Dick scored. It is singular that Wright should have scored through Vanderbilt's two stars.

Wright was the scintillating player of the afternoon. His run was not mere chance it was earned. For two years now Dick has been learning to straight arm, sidestep, and dodge. In one masterful play he extracted the cream of two years' experience. In one great run he demonstrated the magnificence of natural ability, coupled with technique. It took Dick two years to learn his tricks, but in a few short moments he was repaid with interest.

Barron Another Star.

Carter Barron has played good games this year, but this afternoon he went beyond any previous endeavor. Five years ago "Red" Barron ran amuck through the Vandy team. Perhaps it was the memory of that great game, perhaps Carter felt the heritage of a famous brother. Whatever may have been the cause, Carter Barron did himself proud Saturday. He is not as fast as "Big Red," but he nullifies the difference in speed by indomitable fight.

When tackled, Barron fought unflinchingly for an additional yard. He was not down until Vandy men had him laid flat. It was that fighting spirit which gave Barron 112 yards out of the 222 that were gained by Tech from scrimmage.

Wycoff was unfortunate enough to get his leg hurt on the first play of the game. It pained him considerably through the three quarters he remained with his men, and several times it looked as if he would be forced to retire. But he stuck to his guns until relieved by Wright in the fourth period.

Spears' Absence Hurts Vandy.

Vanderbilt was hurt not a little by the absence of Spears from the lineup. A charley horse, developed in practice a couple of weeks ago, was severe enough to keep him from the starting lineup. He sat on the bench watching his teammates put up a masterful fight. He watched in agony Dick Wright cross the goal line. Then in spite of his injury he entered the game to rally his teammates and help Reese put an offensive punch into the game. But the flesh faltered while the spirit was still strong. His leg was not strong enough to stand the gaff, and he was helped to the sidelines after a few minutes in the game.

In every respect, the game was a classic of sports. A huge crowd, one of the largest that has ever attended a football game in Nashville, faced the drizzle that set in just before the game and continued through the first quarter.

The Tech band took the field and gave an exhibition before the players appeared. It was followed a few minutes later by the Blue-coated band of the Commodores. Then the teams appeared, Vandy coming out first. As the Tech players, led by Wycoff, briskly trotted on the field, the Tech supporters, about a thousand in number, gave up a yell that could almost have been heard back in Georgia. After a few signals, and much punting practice, the teams retired to blankets for a few moments, while final arrangements were being made.

Fortunately, the rain which threatened to ruin a colorful contest, subsided at the end of the first quarter. A strong wind, however, blew all during the game, and gave the punters quite an advantage, or presented quite an obstacle, as the case may have been. Tech was favored with this wind in the first and fourth quarters; Vandy in the second and third.

Statements given out by Coach McGugin and Coach Alexander indicate the type of game which was played on Dudley field.

Said McGugin:

"It was a fine contest between two evenly matched teams of two great institutions. The teams were a credit to the game. Certainly, there were two hard fighting, sportsmanlike teams on the field."

Coach Alexander said:

"I congratulate Vanderbilt on the wonderful game she played. I am also proud of my boys. It was a good game to win, and we feel very fortunate to have done so."

Vandy and Tech swapped each other the town earlier in the day. First, Vandy paraded through the main streets, then Tech staged an impromptu procession.

Tech Makes 222 Yards.

Records on the game are interesting. Tech made 222 yards from snap, Vanderbilt 108. Tech made six first downs, Vandy three. Tech punted 13 times for an average of 38 yards. Vandy punted 15 times for an average of 35 yards. Doug Wycoff punted one ball 70 yards, and Bryan's longest boot was an even 75. His shortest was two. Wycoff returned one kick-off 15 yards. Wright returned one 22 yards, and Gil Reese lugged the third back 12 yards towards his opponents' goal. Reese returned three for 36 yards. The others were either gounded, went out of bounds, or over the goal line.

Tech tried one pass only and this was not completed. Vandy tried 12, completed three and had two intercepted. One netted 20 yards, the second three and the third only one. Tech was penalized 40 yards; Vandy 25.

Had it not been for Wright's run in the fourth quarter, the two teams could have played for hours without breaking that scoreless tie. Every man on the Commodore team looked like the finished product. Precision marked their play. They were perfectly coached to stop the jump shift, and perfectly coached to carry out their own offensive schemes. The game, in all its many aspects, was a classic.

GRIFFIN TO OBSERVE EDUCATIONAL WEEK

Grffin, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—Griffin will observe National Education week, November 8-13, with an attractive program arranged by city and county school officials. The dates for the observance here were changed from the week of November 16, owing to a conflict in time with the annual North Georgia Methodist conference.

All schools in Griffin and Spalding county will join in the program, with exercises arranged daily. Armistice day will be celebrated as a part of this observance, with a parade of school children and civic club members being arranged for the occasion.

The daily program follows: November 8, special sermons on education in the churches; November 9 and 10, programs of interest in the schools; November 11, parade in the morning, with program in evening at the Baptist church, under the auspices of the American Legion auxiliary; November 12, program in the schools; November 13, programs in the schools, under auspices of the Woman's club, cooperating with the D. A. R., U. D. C. and the American Legion auxiliary.

Addresses at this time will be delivered by State School Superintendent Fort E. Land, Superintendent J. T. Manley, of the Spaldin county schools, and Superintendent J. M. Lester, of the Griffin city schools.

MACONADMINISTRATION CHANGES WEDNESDAY

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Macon people on Tuesday will ratify in the general election the results of the recent primary, formally electing Wallace Miller and his aldermanic ticket. The Luther Williams administration will hold its last regular meeting on Tuesday night. But on Wednesday night another meeting will be held to confirm the minutes of the previous meeting, and at that time the new administration will be seated.

The following are the aldermen who will go into office with Wallace Miller on Wednesday:

First ward, T. H. Halliburton, mayor pro tem.; C. W. Schaefer and Newton Barnes.

Second ward, Arthur F. Newton, Joe Brown and C. R. Smaling.

Third ward, Mrs. Charles C. Harrold, Morris Michael and Eden Taylor.

Fourth ward, Wilbur M. Collins, J. D. Crump and Roy G. Williams.

LULLA FORBES WON FOUR RACES

The 52nd renewal of the grand circuit opened at Cleveland June 29 and closed at Atlanta October 10 after a run of 15 weeks. During that period there were eleven meetings at which 321 races were decided, 170 being for trotters and 151 for pacers. The latter raced 352 heats and the trotters 413, making a total of 765 for the trip.

The purses amounted to $626,592.25, the most ever paid out in one season since the circuit was organized. In 1924 the total was $572,620.95, in 1923 $570,896.75, in 1922 $517,012.25, and in 1921 $589,097.07.

The 1925 series increased the number of grand circuit meetings since 1876 to 479. At these meetings $16,239,273.13 per paid in purses or stakes to horse owners.

As usual the aged events in the 1925 circuit were dominated by the horses in Murphy's stable. In the colt races the honors were divided between the two and three year olds trained by Will Dickerson, Ben White and Walter Cox.

Murphy Won 59.

On the trip from Cleveland to Atlanta, Murphy won 59 races. His winnings amounted $98,305. These figures again placed the Syracuse stable at the top of the winning column and also raised the amount of Murphy's winnings on the trotting turf from 1909 to the close of 1925 to $1,412,135.

The Belwin gelding Crawford was the leader in the Murphy group. He started off by winning two races at Cleveland in July. This was followed by a defeat at Toledo where Peter Fellows finished in front of him after he won a heat.

During the next seven weeks Crawford won at Kalamazoo, landed four dashes at Aurora, annexed two more races at the Cleveland August meeting as well as one race at Milwaukee and one at Indianapolis. By that time it began to look as if he was in a class by himself.

At Syracuse Crawford started favorite in the $10,000 Empire state purse. On account of the wet weather it was raced over the cinder track and won by Bob Armstrong after two very close finishes. The big son of Chestnut Peter also defeated Crawford in one of his races at Columbus. He won the other two. He was also awarded first place at Lexington in the Walnut Hall cup and Castleton purse and closed the season with a victory at Atlanta.

During the season Crawford was started in 19 races. Of that number he won 16 and was second in the balance. He was the busiest horse that ever made a trip down the line.

The List.

The following gives the names of the horses which won three or more races in the Grand Circuit this year: Crawford, 16; Ribbon Cane, 14; Norman Grattan, 10; Bonnie Watts, 7; Hollyrood Leonard, 7; Queen Volo, 7; Anna Bradford's Girl, 6; Clara Dillon, 6; Dr. Strongworthy, 6; Skeeter W., 6; Callie Direct, 5; Ethelinda, 5; Phil O'Neill, 5; Favonian, 5; Peter Maltby, 5; Single G., 5; Sir Roche, 5; Todd Hart, 5; Gordon Dillon, 4; Lulla Forbes, 4; Thompson Dillon, 4; Trumpet, 4; Frank Worthy, 4; Theodore Guy, 4; Miss Czar Moko, 4; Kentucky Todd, Jr., 4; Aileen Guy, 4; Braden Ruler, 3; Guy Trojan, 3; Grayworthy, 3; Pete Green, 3; Worthy Harvester, 3; Winnie O'Wynn, 3; Lilly the Great, 3; Etta Druien, 3; Tarzan Grattan, 3; Margaret Dillon, 3; Bob Seymour, 3; Bob Armstrong, 3; Cupid's Albingen, 3; Temple Harvester, 3; Jeanette Royal, 3; Jean Grattan, 3.

Of the 43 horses in the above list, Etta Druien, Aileen Guy and Pete Green are the only ones which appeared in it last year. Grayworthy also has an unusual honor of returning after a skip from 1921.

As has been stated Murphy tops the list of Grand Circuit drivers with 59 races to his credit. Cox is in second place with 28. Childs is third with 27. Palin stands fourth with 19 and Dickerson fifth with 16. The latter also won 12 races in the Orange County circuit and two at the Illinois state fair with the Arden Homestead stable horses, making his score 30 for the season.

Up to the close of the Grand Circuit Vic Fleming won 13 races over the mile tracks and 17 over the half-mile rings. Fred Egan 11. Crozier 10, White 9, Ray 8, Garrison 6, McDonald, Edman, Putnam, Allen, John Thomas, Henry Thomas and George Loomis 5 each, and J. L. Dodge, 4.

In the money winning column Murphy is again in first place with $98,305 and Cox second with $73,437. The horses raced by Marvin Childs won $48,931.25, Ribbon Cane being the most successful. Will Dickerson won $32,214.50 in the grand circuit, $21,990 in the Orange county circuit, and $2,000 at the Illinois state fair. This makes a total of $56,204.50 and places him third in the table of money winning drivers this year.

Fred Egan's mount behind Thompson Dillon at Toledo when he won the $25,000 trot jumped his winnings in the grand circuit this year to $29,475. Net Ray gathered in $22,625.50, his largest item being the $15,325 Tarzan Grattan won at Kalamazoo.

Several Winners.

The Murphy winners in addition to Crawford were Hollyrood Leonard, one of the leaders in the fastest classes; Trumpet, winner of the $25,000 trot at Aurora; Queen Volo, Clara Dillon, Dr. Strongworthy, Etta Druien, winner of the Transylvania; Mac Silk, Pearl Benboe, Becky Beal, Mag Abbe, Double Cross and Hot Toddy.

Cox won the matron and horseman stakes with Sam Williams. He also won the $10,000 pace at Milwaukee with Skeeter W. and rode his first mile below two minutes behind Margaret Dillon when he won with her in 1:59 3-4 at Kalamazoo. The other leaders in his stable were Ethelinda, Cupid's Albingen, Thompson Dillon, Tom Bradley, Grayworthy and Star Ruth.

Marvin Childs made a remarkable showing with Ribbon Cane. She won fourteen races on the trip. She won a heat from Tarzan Grattan in the $25,000 pace at Kalamazoo and a heat from Skeeter W in the $10,000 event at Milwaukee. Childs displayed the best group of trotters by The Harvester which have appeared to date. He won with Worthy Harvester, Temple Harvester and Pat Harvester, the first foal of the pacing queen, Miss Harris M. Childs also scored with Bonnie Watts and Ramona Wafts.

Palin had the mount in nine of the ten races won by Norman Grattan. Theodore Guy also won four races for him after he was returned from the Murphy stable. Palin's other winners were: Silas J. Patchen, Peter Mann, Southward, Braden Ruler and the two-year-old colt Hazleton which he drove for Cox at Atlanta.

Mire and Maroons' Line Strength Prevent Grange From Treating 70,000 Fans

Champaign, Ill., November 7.—(AP)—Out of the mire and mud of Illinois' $2,000,000 Memorial stadium, Illinois arose today to defeat Chicago, 13 to 6, while 70,000 spectators sat through a driving rain, drenched to the skin, to pay tribute to Red Grange, in one of the most remarkable demonstrations ever given an athlete in America.

The spectators waited and waited in vain for the annihilator of Pennsylvania's championship dreams to cut loose just once on the slippery, muddy gridiron and race across the chalk lines to give them the thrill they were seeking. The galloping ghost of the Illinois eleven, however, was unable to break away even once, because he was simply unable to keep his feet whenever he started.

The famous redhead carried the ball from scrimmage 17 times for gains of 18 yards and was thrown for a total loss of 26 yards. Grange's interference today was a mess, because neither Britton nor Daugherty, slipping and sliding in the mud, could get started.

Gets Away for 25 Yards.

Grange's outstanding achievement today was a 25-yard run in returning Lampe's kick-off after Illinois' first touchdown.

Today's game was played under the most wretched conditions imaginable. The field, covered with straw for a week for the purpose of keeping it dry in the event of snow, was a quagmire of mud, with pools of water dotting it, and so slippery that running was out of the question.

The inspired Maroons presented a husky backfield that outcharged Illinois with "Five-Yard" McCarty, the plunging fullback bearing the brunt of the attack until he was injured and taken out of the game in the second period. The Maroons had a decided advantage because of the weight and power, but Illinois played the smarter game.

Late in the third period, with the score tied at 6-6, Rouse attempted to punt. Reitsch and Kassell blocked it, D'Ambrosio, Illinois, fell on the ball back of the goal line as it bounded among the bewildered Maroons and gave Illinois her victory. Britton passed to Kassell for the point after touchdown. McCarty scored the first touchdown of the game in the second period after Grange had fumbled and Chicago had recovered on Illinois' 18-yard line.

McCarty Scores Touchdown.

On Illinois' two-yard line, and on the first play, McCarty tore through the left side of the Illinois line for a touchdown. Curley's pass for the extra point was grounded.

Illinois evened up the count in the same period as a result of three fumbles in succession by Keinwein. On the second fumble Keinwein lost ten yards and Illinois took the ball on down to Chicago's ten-yard line. Chicago regained the ball on downs and Keinwein, attempting a punt, fumbled and dropped the ball and kicked it from where it lay behind his own goal line, the ball going out of bounds on Chicago's two-yard line.

Britton broke through Chicago's right guard to tie the count. Britton calmly wiped the toe of his shoe with a towel before trying to place kick for the extra point, but failed.

2 THOMASTON BANKS FORM CONSOLIDATION

Thomaston, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—According to announcement here today, the Bank of Thomaston will be merged with the Farmers' and Mechants bank and will continue business under the name of the latter. The bank has a capital and surplus of $150,000.

There will be no change in the officers of the Farmers and Merchants bank, except that W. H. Dayton and W. Y. Daniel will be added to the board of directors, it is announced.

Mother of Draft Dodger Is Object Of Blackmailers

Philadelphia, November 7.—Mrs. Emma Bergdoll, mother of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, the famous draft dodger, has been the object of a $25,000 blackmail plot, the police revealed today.

The blackmailers threatened the lives of both Mrs. Bergdoll and her son and escaped a trap set for them by the police.

Conforming to instructions received in letters and watched by detectives and department of justice agents, Mrs. Bergdoll last night placed a paper package containing the money on the Walnut street bridge here and then hurried away.

A man following her was seen to hesitate near the package and then disappear. Later a Baltimore & Ohio railroad employee picked up the package and turned it over to an official of the road.

Mrs. Bergdoll refused to discuss the case today, but admitted she had received the threatening letters, which were typewritten in German.

NORTH DAKOTA HIT BY ZERO WEAHER

Chicago, November 7.—(AP)—A cold wave, the second this fall, was on the weather charts for this section of the middlewest as the temperature dropped to zero in North Dakota.

Besides the cold high area in the northwest, a southeastern storm with snow and sleet in some sections west of the Mississippi river, was rushing northeastward. The center of the storm was in Ozark mountains.

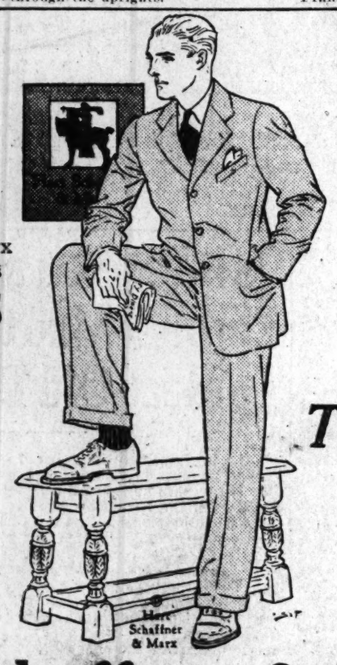

A drop to around 20 degrees above zero in Chicago tonight was anticipated with fair weather and much colder tomorrow.

Rain today was expected to turn to snow by night.

CITY MILK ORDINANCE UPHELD AT HUNTSVILLE

Huntsville, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—A jury in the circuit court has rendered a verdict of guilty in the case of the state against John Gullatt, milk dealer of this city charged with violating the milk ordinance. This is a test case of the milk ordinance which is the same set of regulations in effect in numerous Alabama cities, having been prepared by the state board of health.

Gullatt gave notice of appeal to the supreme court.

PENN STATE BATTLES NOTRE DAME TO SCORELESS TIE

Florida Crushes Clemson, 40 to 0, With Flashy Runs

'Gators Score On Tigers At Will

Clemson College, S. C., November 7.—(AP)—Florida's "boom," in the form of a thundering 'Gator eleven, crushed Clemson under a 40-to-0 count here today. The margin of victory produced a big upset in dope and gave Florida her most impressive win of the season.

Florida at no stage of play was threatened by Clemson and scored almost at will during the second half. Sensational runs characterized the visitors' play throughout the contest, featured by twin 30-yard dashes for touchdowns in intercepted passes by "Horse Bishop in the final quarter.

Six touchdowns, three successful kicks for extra points and a field goal accounted for the 'Gator score. The superiority of the Floridians was demonstrated in every department of the game. The visitors registered 21 first downs compared with Clemson's four. Florida essayed five forward passes, all in the last half, two of which were successful, while Clemson hurled 21 passes, three of which were completed and as many intercepted.

In the opening quarter, Florida marched down the field in three successive first downs to the Clemson four-yard line, where Brown smashed through it for the first touchdown. Jones failed to kick goal. The Tigers launched an air attack in the second quarter, which produced 26 yards in three thrusts and Florida was kept at bay momentarily.

Florida ran rampant in the third quarter, bagging 21 points as the result of three touchdowns and as many points after scoring. Jones' 26-yard run, followed by his two-yard line buck, accounted for the first score in the period. A few moments later Jones slipped through the opposing line for 30 yards and another touchdown. Consistent hammering at the line opened a path for Bishop to rip off 20 yards and another touchdown. Jones added the three extra points.

Scott's field goal and Bishop's two additional touchdowns produced the remaining 15 points of the Gator score.

TULANE BEATS LA. POLY, 37-0

New Orleans, November 7.—(AP)—Tulane defeated Louisiana Poly, 37 to 0, here today in a game featured by the scoring of Flournoy, the big back counting 31 of the Greenback's 37 points. Flournoy scored four touchdowns and added four points after touchdowns, missing one. He also kicked a goal from the field. The visitors offered stiff opposition to the Tuline drive in the first half, but weakened under the continued pounding of the winners as the game progressed.

V. P. I. BATTLES IN 0 TO 0 TIE

Blacksburg, Va., November 7.—(AP) Honors were even in the nip and tuck, nothing to nothing battle between V. P. I. and North Carolina State college, fought on a muddy field today. Such havoc had morning rains played with the gridiron that at times it was impossible to recognize the players on the field. The first quarter was Tech's, the second State's, with the last a punting duel to a draw.

The Gobblers' only real chance to score came in the opening period after they had rushed the ball to the visitors' 7-yard line. Two line bucks by Kaulkner and Barrie gained two yards. A pass was grounded, a fourth attempt to gain the five yards that meant a touchdown resulted in a three-yard loss and the ball was Carolina's. Tech did not threaten again.

In the second quarter State launched their offensive. After the ball had been advanced to the 15-yard line Austin was sent in to win the game with a drop-kick. But the boot went into the Gobbler line and the ball changed hands.

Six Stars in Coming Football Battle Between Tech and Georgia

Photos by Kenneth Rogers

Above are six men who probably will star in the great football game set for Grant field next Saturday between Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia. The game is the first between the two institutions since 1916 and the winner will receive The Constitution's $500 silver trophy to hold until the next game in 1926. Left to right in the group are: Captain Smack Thompson, Georgia end; Scrappy Moore, Georgia quarterback and star punter; Owen Pool, Tech center, who has earned a splendid reputation this season; Buster Kilpatrick, Georgia halfback; Captain Douglas Wycoff (above) of Tech, one of the country's greatest halfbacks, and Sam Murray (below), Tech's plunging fullback.

N. CAROLINA BEATS V. M I., 23 TO 11

Richmond, Va., November 7.—(AP)—The University of North Carolina crashed its way to a 23-11 victory over Virginia Military institute here today before a crowd of 10,000 spectators. A splendid running attack, an ability to intercept passes when deep in their own territory and the faculty of capitalizing scoring opportunities were three factors that spelled victory for the Tarheel eleven.

Virginia Military institute, by a dazzling aerial attack in the first few minutes of play, was the first to score, but the Down Homers soon rallied and after recovering a Cadet fumble on the kickoff tore their way through for a touchdown. Sparrow's drop-kick for the extra point put the Carolinians in the lead until Windy White's placement kick in the second half propelled the ball 45 yards for a field goal.

Later in this period an exchange of punts gave Carolina the ball on V. M. I.'s 37-yard line, with a neat pass Carolina gained 12 yards and then on a fake pass Underwood skirted right end for 20 yards to the Cadets' six-inch line. From there the ball was taken over to put the Down Homers in front again, never to be overtaken.

In the third period, Sparrow lifted a field goal from the 10-yard line, after Carolina had recovered the ball on a Cadet fumble and worked it to the five-yard line. The Tarheels benefited again in the fourth period by a Cadet fumble, recovering the ball in midfield, and on two beautiful passes and end runs, went over for their final score.

Although defeated, the Virginians had Carolina dazzled by their aerial attack and during the third and fourth frames had the ball within scoring distance.

BEAR HARRIERS BEAT PETRELS

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The Mercer cross country team defeated Oglethorpe at Centennial stadium here this afternoon 19 to 34. The run took place between the halves of Mercer-Furman football game and was a part of the home-coming day program.

Charlie Walker, Bear captain, was first, coming in 13.37 minutes after starting. King and Grover, of Mercer, followed close on his heels. Sheppard, Petrel leader, was fourth. Carpenter, Mercer, came fifth, and was followed by Lilby, Burts, Heath, Sinthan and Luggel, of Oglethorpe.

Sportively Speaking—

By H. C. HAMILTON

An Uncertain Game. Upsets of Yesterday. What Georgia Did.

FOOTBALL, as we have sought to point out, is a very uncertain thing. The results of Saturday's combats, east or west, south or north, are mighty convincing arguments in support of such a stand, for there certainly were some weird performances.

Imagine Northwestern defeating Michigan, 3 to 2, in a contest where neither team was able to make a first down—and this only a week after Michigan had absolutely run wild against Navy, and Northwestern had been beaten by Tulane. Or if you dislike to think about that as being an upset consider this: Cornell and Dartmouth met as unbeaten teams and in the first quarter Cornell scored two touchdowns. Thereafter business turned very bad for Cornell, which finally lost the game by a score of 62 to 13.

IN the Georgia Tech-Vanderbilt game at Nashville there was a great amount of trying to break through the Vanderbilt line. Wright did break through for a 56-yard sprint and a touchdown, but that was the only breaking of any considerable performance. On the other hand Vanderbilt tried the Tech ends, tackles, center and guards, but to small advantage.

In a football game such as that one was a fan certainly would have been justified in predicting that Tech would win by at least three touchdowns. Judging from what Georgia and Tennessee did against Vanderbilt the conclusion should have been that Tech would at least do as well. Tech won, which is the important part of the whole business. What we are pointing out is the folly of comparing past results in order to get a line on future performances.

THE annual scrap between Yale, Harvard and Princeton got under way Saturday with Princeton tearing the daylights out of a Harvard team which had not been expected to offer a great amount of exhibition. Now the conclusion should be that, inasmuch as Princeton beat Harvard so badly and weaker teams have been able to score on Yale, Princeton should give Yale a whale of a battle, while Harvard should fall ingloriously at the hands of the Eli.

Chances are that Princeton and Yale will play a close game, and it is not at all improbable that Harvard will reverse all expectations and fight Yale to a gory standstill.

AT Columbus, Ga., the University of Georgia eleven made sausage meat of Auburn, winning by 34 to 0, and that is the largest score ever piled up by Georgia against an Auburn team. Georgia passed, bucked the line and conducted itself generally as a good football team should conduct itself.

Georgia has lost football games to Virginia and Tennessee by small margins. It beat Vanderbilt and Auburn handily and now faces Tech. That record is nothing to be lightly passed over by those who started out believing Tech would run over the Bulldogs. Tech will have the hardest time imaginable beating the Athens eleven, and may not be good enough to do it. In fact, there are people in Atlanta who do not think much of Alabama's chances against Georgia.

NEWS dispatches tell us that Red Grange couldn't get started against Chicago at Champaign Saturday because of the mud. And that is nothing more nor less than what is commonly known as apple sauce. Grange played against Pennsylvania with the field slippery and muddy, yet he turned in the most brilliant game of his or any other player's career. The fact is, of course, that western conference teams have learned to break up the plays Bob Zuppke has built around Grange. They break up the first attack and throw Grange before he has started.

PENNSYLVANIA GREAT STATE FOR HUNTING

Pennsylvania is the greatest hunting ground in the United States, and each year's kill exceeds 500 bears, 6,000 deer, 600,000 grouse and more than 5,000,000 rabbits. Licenses to hunt in the state are taken out by 650,000 annually.

MERCER WINS, 17-0, FROM FURMAN

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—Mercer university's football eleven played its greatest game of the season today, defeating Furman, 17 to 0 and outplaying the visitors all the way through. Mercer's line not only did wonderful work, but the Baptists' aerial attack worked to perfection on a number of occasions.

In the first three minutes of play Mercer made its first touchdown on a forward pass, Smith to Parks, who ran 20 yards to touchdown.

In the second period a fumble of a punt, by Furman on her own five-yard line was costly. Pierce recovered the ball and went over for the second and final touchdown.

A field goal in the final quarter by Phoney Smith ended the scoring.

The ball was kept in Furman's territory most of the time during the game.

In the second period Dunn sustained a broken arm.

S. M. U. LOSES TO ARKANSAS

Dallas, Texas, November 7.—(AP)—Arkansas university Razorbacks and Southern Methodist university Mustangs clashed here this afternoon in a colorless gridiron contest that ended in a scoreless tie, the second such deadlock for the Mustangs in two weeks. The result of today's game leaves the Razorbacks in the southwest conference cellar with S. M. U. perched just above them. Only 4,000 persons attended today's game, which was played on a muddy field.

S. M. U.'s aerial attack blew up and the brilliant Cortemeglia was somewhat off form in his punting and line plunging. The Razorbacks' line held fast throughout the game and few gains were recorded on either side.

A player from each team divided the first honors with superior playing. D'Honau, Razorback quarter, and Ox Key, Mustang end, the former by brilliant offensive work and the latter by spectacular defensive efforts, were the stars.

Savannah High Overwhelms Smithie Eleven, 26 to 7

Savannah, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Giving before the merciless drive of Thompson, Sharpley, Whittington and Williams, the "four horsemen" of the Blue Jackets, Tech High school's proud colors were overshadowed by the Blue this afternoon when the Atlantans went down to a 26-7 defeat in a game that found the Savannahans playing their opportunities to the utmost and smashing the defenses of Tech High in almost every play.

Few times did the Blue Jackets resort to the air to gain ground, the Savannah backfield plunging through for moderate but steady gains that did not cease even when the ball was on the one-yard line of the visitors. The bullet-like passes hurled by Tech High's ace, Davidson, and received mostly by Cook should have been the big card for the Atlanta boys but they failed to use this weapon as often as they should have.

Smithies Pass Over Goal.

Davidson's quick throw to Cook in the second period over the goal line was responsible for the touchdown that the Tech High boys scored against the Blue Jackets. Every man in the Savannah backfield, that is, the regular rear defense, Sharpley, Williams, Whittington and Captain Freddie Thompson got a touchdown. Thompson in addition kicking for the two extra points.

Savannah scored first in the initial period and failed to make the extra point. Tech High, with this disadvantage, drove through in the second quarter with a first down to their credit and a pass, Davidson to Davis, carried the ball 13 yards to High school's 15-yard line. Line players shortened up this territory and Davidson and Davis participated in the forward that won the touchdown for the visitors. When Davidson kicked successfully, Savannah's goose was cooked, at least temporarily.

Game To Cause Confusion.

Not minding the fact that they were gumming up the calculations regarding the G. I. A. A. title, the Blue and White came back with a smashing attack that froze the hearts of those who banked on the Tech boys to have won an easy victory. At no time this season have the Blue boys gotten underway as they did today, and their reward for taking advantage of the breaks was a victory over one of the highest rated teams in the G. I. A. A. It is likely to cause some mix-up, however, when the titular honors of the state are passed out.

Waugh, Bardwell, Cook and Parshall stood out in the attack of the visitors, but they never reached the stage at which they could bother the Blue Jackets for any length of time. Fairly long strides toward the goal of Savannah were not repeated and nearly the whole game was played in the territory covered by the Smithies.

COTHRAN WINS 3RD CUP RACE

Ben Cothran, Georgia Tech freshman, practically clinched the Woodruff-Brooks cup Saturday morning when he won the third of the five cross-country runs being staged for possession of the cup. The race was run over the regular cross-country course, the distance being two and one-half miles. Cothran ran the distance in 17 minutes and 45 seconds.

Solomon, who won second place last Saturday, crossed the finish line five seconds behind Cothran, his time being 17 minutes and 50 seconds. Borchardt came third with a time of 18 minutes and five seconds.

The winner of each race is given five points, second gets three points, and to third place goes one point. Cothran, who has won every race so far, has scored a total of 15 points; Womelsdorf, who did not run Saturday, has four points; Singleton and Borchardt have one point each. Cothran has only to place third in the next two races to win the cup.

The fourth race will be held next Saturday, the distance being three and one-half miles. On the following Saturday the final race will be held over the cross-country course to the waterworks and back. A cup will be awarded to the winner of this race.

ROGERS HORNSBY IS HOMERUN CHAMP

Rogers Hornsby, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, champion hitter of the National league is the 1925 home run champion of the major leagues. He knocked out 39 during the season, while his nearest rival, Bob Meusel of the Yankees, came through with 33. Babe Ruth, who holds the record for home runs in the majors, with 59, cashed in with 25, tying Ken Williams of the St. Louis Browns, for third place among the four-base cloutera.

MERCER PLANS CAGE CAMPAIGN

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(AP)—Mercer university has announced one of the best basketball schedules during her history in the cage sport, which follows to date:

December 31—Indiana in Crawfordsville, Ind.

January 1—Michigan State at Lansing, Mich.

January 2—Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind.

January 4—Northwestern at Evanston, Ill.

January 5—Marquette at Milwaukee, Wis.

January 6—Chicago at Chicago.

January 13—Marquette at Macon.

January 16—Auburn at Auburn, Alabama.

January 20—A. A. C. at Atlanta.

January 29—Chattanooga at Chattanooga.

January 30—Vanderbilt at Nashville, Tenn.

February 1—B. A. C. at Birmingham.

February 2—Alabama at Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Negotiations are also under way for games with Georgia Tech, Oglethorpe, Florida, Furman, the University of Chattanooga and the University of Georgia.

CENTRE LOSES TO TENNESSEE

Danville, Ky., November 7.—(AP)—The University of Tennessee defeated Centre college here today 12 to 0.

Both Tennessee touchdowns came in the first half, Centre strengthening in the last half and holding them scoreless.

Dodson's 20-yard run and a 30-yard pass from Nehf to Lowe accounted for Tennessee's scores.

Muddy Field Hampers Backs

State College, Pa., November 7.—(AP)—Penn State and Notre Dame, playing in a field of mud and with rain pouring down, fought each other to a scoreless tie here today before 25,000 persons.

Only twice during the battle was a score of any sort in sight, once when Rex Enright, of the Indianians, attempted a placement goal from the 20-yard line, which was wide of the posts by two feet, and again when Helzig of State failed to grasp a slippery pass from center.

Driving and sliding, the combatants fought gamely against terrific odds after the first period. At the start of the game, Knute Rockne's eleven produced a powerful offensive with Hearndon, Flannagan and Enright battering their way down the field for 40 yards on three plays, only to encounter a solid set of Penn State forwards. State gained the ball and from that point it became a question of kicking.

Unable to Return Punts.

Captain Gray, of Penn State, opposed "Red" Edwards, of Notre Dame, in the duel of toes and the one matched the other, booting the unwieldy ball for from 40 to 60 yards. For a time, there were runbacks of a few yards, but soon the field had become so slippery that receivers could not start.

So it went for two periods, although a forward pass from Edwards to Hearndon which gained 20 yards gave Notre Dame an advantage in the second which it eventually yielded through a kick over the goal line by Edwards.

Hearndon carried Gray's kickoff in the second half back to his 46-yard line and Enright and Flannagan added a first down but that was the end of the effort. A long pass by Edwards was downed on State's two-yard and from which point Gray issued one of his poorest kicks, only 38 yards. Edwards and Flannagan dove through to the 15-yard mark, but Edwards lost 15 when Weston got him from behind.

Enright Fails at Kick.

Interference with the receiver of a forward pass cost State 15 yards and from this point Enright failed at his placement goal. After three plays in the fourth period, Weston tried a kick from the 32-yard line and this also failed.

Few forward passes were attempted and only one was successful, that of Edwards to Hearndon. Half a dozen grounded when receivers slipped in attempting catches. Notre Dame had the advantage in what little rushing was done, but both lines braced when danger threatened and compelled punting.

LAVONIA WINS FROM HARTWELL

Lavonia, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Lavonia High school downed Hartwell High here yesterday 6 to 0. This game is a nannual classic in north Georgia high school circles and the margin of victory for either team has not been over six points for several years.

Lavonia's line was too good for the visitors as they made only one first down in the first half. Lavonia scored a touchdown in th second quarter on straight football and had the ball on Hartwell's one-foot line when the priod ended. Sewell, for Lavonia, missed two field goals by inches in this period.

Hartwell's line stiffened in the last half and stopped two steady marches in the shadow of its goal. The only threat to score was in the last quarter when Hartwell completed several passes. Adams, Sewell and Verner played best for Lavonia. Rogers and Johnson starred for the visitors.

MISS. AGGIES BEAT CHOCTAWS

Starkville, Miss., November 7.—(AP) The Mississippi Aggies eliminated the last contender for the football championship of Mississippi by defeating the Mississippi college Choctaws, 46 to 0, here today. The last half was played during a rainstorm.

By smashing line drives and sweeping end runs, the Aggies carried the ball for long gains consistently. They were seldom held for downs by the Choctaws. Coach Bierman removed most of the regulars from the game after they had amassed a comfortable lead in the first half. The substitutes scored three touchdowns in the last half and prevented Mississippi college from scoring.

TWENTY SEASONS FOR TY TO HIT OVER .300

Ty Cobb, manager of the Detroit Tigers, finished the 1925 baseball season with a batting mark of .380. His record this year made the twentieth season in which he has batted better than .300, the only other player in the major league to have accomplished that being the late Adrian C.

New York, November 7.—(AP)—Very unfavorable weather advices from the south caused rallies from an opening decline in the cotton market today, but after selling up from 19.73 to 20.00, January closed at 19.85, the general market closing barely steady at net declines of 3 to 22 points. December was relatively weak, closing at 20.30, the lowest level of the day and 22 points net lower compared with a loss of about 3 to 20 points on the later deliveries.

The market opened steady at a decline of 3 to 15 points acive months showing net losses of 11 to 20 points in early trading under liquidation combined with local and southern selling, which seemed to come largely from spot houses and was supposed to repress trading. The early offerings were soon absorbed and the forenoon market rallied on the outlook for rains with lower temperatures in the eastern belt, reprts of further rains in the southwest, and predictions for another cold wave with freezing temperatures in Oklahoma, Arkansas and parts of Texas.

For a time covering was active, December selling up to 20.55 and March to 20.19, or about 3 to 16 points net higher, but at these figures the market met renewed hedging or liquidation. There was further spot house selling of December, accompanied by rumors that some of the more important holders of near-month contracts were liquidating their lines, and the December weakness helped to pull down the later deliveries. At the close December was selling within 45 points of January, compared with a difference of 64 points at the close yesterday.

Local traders found nothing in the news to throw any fresh light on the showing of Monday's government crop report, which will not reflect the latest unfavorable weather as it only carries the crop up to November 1. Private reports recently published have pointed to a crop of 15,001,000 bales on the average and ginnings of 11,000,000 bales.

Private cables from Liverpool said hedge selling there had been absorbed by covering and trade selling.

ORLEANS MARKET AWAITS U. S. REPORT.

New Orleans, November 7.—(AP) The cotton market today was a prebureau affair with trading restricted to evening up and liquidation in advance of the government report to be issued Monday morning. Although cables were favorable the market opened irregular, near months slightly higher and late months slightly lower. All months eased off after the call, showing losses of 8 to 9 points from the previous close but prices soon rallied on the unfavorable showing by the weather map and the forecast for freezing weather in the west over Sunday, gaining 19 to 27 points from the early lows. This gain was gradually lost during the second hour of the short session on pre-bureau liquidation and the close showed net losses for the day of 1 to 9 points.

Following the irregular start, prices eased off to 19.65 for December and January and to 19.43 for March or 8 to 9 points under yesterday's close. These prices remained the lows of the day. The rally which followed during the first hour carried December up to 19.84, January to 19.87 and March to 19.70 or 19 to 27 points up from the lows.

From these high points the market gradually eased off under the pressure of pre-bureau liquidation until prices at the end were near the lows and in the case of December the low point was duplicated but not broken through. The market closed steady and irregularly slightly net lower.

The average of the private estimates so far issued is 15,111,000 bales for the crop and 11,124,000 for ginnings. The exports for the day totalled 62,590 bales.

Stock Market Succumbs To Heavy Selling Pressure

Total sales, 1,307,700.

New York, November 7.—(By the Associated Press.)—Wearied by the intense activity of the past week, which had carried prices to new peak levels and smashed records for the volume and breadth of trading, the stock market today succumbed to the pressure of week-end realizing sales. Prices turned decidedly reactionary as the week drew to a close, but not until after United States Steel and a score of other leading industrials had spurted forward again to new planes.

The reaction was considered a natural development after the decided advance of the past few days. Despite that the speculative frenzy showed signs of exhaustion, however, the market still retained traces of its earlier buoyancy. As representative shares gave way before the onslaught of selling, new specialties were ushered into buying favor with a few net gains of 1 to 4 points standing out in contrast to the longer list of losses for the day.

With United States Steel common selling at the highest level in its history, it was inevitable that a flood of rumors regarding favorable developments for the corporation's stockholders should be broadcast. These revolved about the possibility of a distribution of the company's huge undivided surplus and attracted another flood of buying orders into the market soon after the opening. After running up more than a point to a new peak at 139½, however, the stock finally crumbled to 137¾ closing at 137¼ with a fractional loss for the day.

Encouraged by the early buoyancy of the premier industrial issue, representatives of other industrial groups followed its leadership to new high ground. Among them were General Motors at 149 3-4; Allied Chemical at 114 3-4; United States Rubber at 89 1-4; Texas Gulf Sulphur at 121 1-2 and Schulte Cigar Stores at 125 1-4.

Many of these issues, by virtue of their exceptional strength were singled out as targets in the latter selling attack, which cancelled most of the early advances and drove the majority of the stock below last night's closing figures. Recessions were most marked, however, in the high-priced specialties, with Dupont, General Electric, Brown Shoe and United States Cast Iron Pipe sagging 7 to 11 points below the day's maximum prices.

Undiminished outside buying was an important factor in stiffening the market's resistance and in the final few minutes of trading brisk rallies were again under way. Allied Chemical showed sustained strength, closing with a gain of more than 4 points, and some of the railroad shares which had escaped the wave of profit-taking and bear selling were given additional support.

Indications that the French government was considering new plans to support its currency, possibly with the aid of a new American credit, brought about a further recovery in the franc to above 4.05c. The Italian lire was strengthened by reports that an accord on a debt settlement was near, while sterling exchange held firm around $4.84 3-8.

Southern Georgia Cotton Crop Shows Large Increase

BY MARTIN V. CALVIN.
(Specialist in Agriculture and Economics, Georgia Department of Agriculture.)

A number of years ago an aphorism was popular in Georgia to the effect that, when "a pound of cotton would buy two pounds of dry-salted pork," the people were in a highly prosperous condition. I have not the time or the inclination to search the records for that alleged fact; I prefere to deal with conditions as they now exist.

I have just completed a study of the government's census report of cotton ginned in this state quite up to October 26—crop of 1925 compared with that of 1924. It proved to be very interesting report; it deals with things accomplished. The basic fact is, that the number of bales of cotton ginned to any given date is the number of bales produced, and in sight at that date. There are no intangibles on which one may speculate.

In the census report, released October 26, the total number of bales ginned was 1,051,622 compared with 668,466 in 1924. Of the 161 counties, 134 reported. Of those, 26 northern sections, 51 central sections and 57 southern section.

The northern counties produced 15.3 per cent or 160,898 bales; the central counties produced 26.6 per cent, or 279,731 bales; the southern counties produced 595,218 bales; the "all others," that is, 27 counties, produced 1.5 per cent, or 15,775 bales.

Seven northern counties produced, in 1925, 67,362 bales, compared with 46,480 bales in 1924; per cent of increase, 44.8.

Five central counties produced, in 1925, 102,331 bales, compared with 67,206 bales in 1924; per cent of increase, 52.2.

Fourteen southern counties produced, in 1925, 280,587 bales, compared with 181,868 in 1924; per cent of increase, 54.2.

To my mind, that is a most encouraging report. Indeed, when one recalls the weevil's destructive work of 1924, to say nothing of preceding years, during which it held high sway, the results of 1925 are practically marvellous.

Greater results may be wrought in 1926; provided the cotton growers will now determine carefully to consider the supremely important question as to the procedure to be adopted in the matter of acreage, choice seed, and he economy which rests in a liberal application of high grade fertilizer, rich in plant food demanded by the crop, to every acre.

Acreage is of extraordinary importance; for the reason that too large an area cannot be thoroughly prepared, cannot be economically i. e., liberally fertilized; cannot be systematically cultivated.

This proposition is not in the nature of advice, it is a statement of facts that should challenge careful consideration.

My sympathy is with the cotton growers. I appreciate the embarrassments by which a large number of them are beset on the right hand and on the left; I know how crippling, how depressing, isolation is to a host of them. Isolation means the lack of community interest which is a tower of strength to other business men. The latter are in the villages, the towns and the cities of the state. They experience but little trouble when confronted by an embarrassing situation; they turn to their fellows in business for counsel and for reasonable aid.

When the weevil came in 1919, a number of farmers declared they would not again plant cotton. Doubtless, the majority reconsidered, and resumed planting.

We must, of course, adhere to the practice of crop diversification and live stock farming, but we need to produce more and better cotton—more and better lint cotton per acre. With select seed, a soil thoroughly prepared, true economy in the use of high grade fertilizer, and with the most approved cultural methods, cotton can be profitably produced.

One would discourage the production of tobacco or grain crops or any other desirable crop, but cotton is, as it has been, the only crop we produce that is clothed with the dignity of collateral. No other crop gives the producer "standing at bank;" no other crop stands on so secure a foundation as cotton.

It is true that the world is producing more cotton a year than at any time in the past three decades. It is preparing to grow more cotton. Let the other sections of the world carry out their plans. They cannot stand in the way of the producers of cotton on cotton's native heath—the southern states.

PRICES RECOVER IN CURB TRADING

New York, November 7.—(By the Associated Press.)—The market on the curb exchange today displayed a more settled tone than had prevailed on other sessions during the week. There was a strong undertone to the general list with decided support appearing in the more prominent issues around the levels reached on the late recovery of yesterday.

An early feature was noted in Lehigh Power which opened at a new high at 184½ but suffered a sharp reaction in the later dealings.

National Power opened at 447 and then reacted about 3 points. Weakness developed in several issues in the later dealings.

Industrial and oil stocks lacked any movement of material importance, although trading in these issues as elsewhere continued in large volume.

Trading on the curb during the week was the largest ever known in its history, not only in regard to the volume of sales but in the number of various securities traded. The daily volume of transactions ranged above 800,000 shares of which a little over one-third on some days was in the oil stocks. Trading in bonds amounted to over $1,000,000 daily including transactions in many of the new foreign bonds.

New high records were in order in a large number of issues. Trans-Lux moved up from 11 to 12½ and Nizer Corporation "B" advanced from 69½ to 85 followed by a reaction. Kelvinator also made a new high record, advancing from 70 to above 81. Nickel Plate on an advance of over 2 points to above 105 was another stock to reach a new high level.

Reactions followed advances in many of these issues but new buying quickly appeared. General Baking issues were directly influenced by the announcement of the closing up of the merger deal.

Public utilities traveled over a wide range. National Power moved up from 409 to 467 prior to the announcement of the plan to split up the capitalization on the basis of 15 to 1. Carolina Power rose from 410 to 456½ and American Light and Traction moved up from 274½ to 288.

Oil stocks were active and strong at intervals but advances in many of these issues were followed by sharp reactions. Kay Copper continued an active feature in the mining group.

Catholics Acquire Building in Macon For Community Center

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Edison Huff, of Atlanta, has sold the old public library building on Mulberry street, across the street from the Grand theater, to the Columbian Building association for $16,250, it became known here today.

The building will become a community center for the Catholic societies of Macon—the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Woman's club and the Boy Scout and Girl Scout troops of that church and other organizations.

The building is three stories has a large auditorium and ample room for a community house.

Material Living Conditions Of Americans in Last Year Highest in History---Hoover

Secretary of Commerce Declares Return To Normal Business in Europe Has Helped Gain in U.S.

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Material conditions of living for the American people during the last year have been the "highest in all history," Secretary Hoover declared today in an economic review made public as part of the annual report of the commerce department.

Factors listed by the secretary as contributing to this condition included a practically complete absence of unemployment, high wages, efficient railroad operation, an equitable balance of prices as among the greater producing groups of the population and a gradual return to stable currencies and normal business operations among the nations abroad.

Banking Situation.

Mr. Hoover's review took in the banking situation, and noted the investment abroad by Americans during the year ending June 30, 1924, of $1,382,000,000 and the net gold export from the country of $115,000,000 as further contributions to general stability.

"The greatest volume of construction operations on record," was also proceeding internally in the United States, representing an investment for the year of $6,000,000,000, and the secretary noted the results as "for the the most part well calculated to meet the permanent and growing needs of the nation."

Illustrating the situation by index figures, Mr. Hoover's review said that, taking 1919 output as 100, during the fiscal year 1925 manufacturing production in the country was 118; mineral production 124; railroad freight haulage 110; factory employment 82; and building contracts let were 111. Retail sales on the average showed a substantial gain over 1919.

Cost of Living.

Considering prices of 1913 as 100, retail food costs for 1925 were found to be 150 and the general cost of living to be 172. Farm products had an index number of 153, food and clothing 169, metal and metal products 130, and building materials 174.

"Building activity was well distributed throughout the different regions of the country," Mr. Hoover continued. "And there was apparently an increased consumption of building materials on the farms. . . .

"Although some instances may be claimed of expenditures not justified by current needs, the sum spent for construction for the most part represented not only a keeping pace with the needs of expanding population, but also a substantial bettering of the country housing and commercial facilities.

Housing Shortage.

"The housing shortage arising from the war has not yet been substantially relieved for the lower income groups, and one of the great tasks ahead of the country is to organize this field so that new homes may be reasonably financed and owned preponderantly through the thrift of the individual families who occupy them. . . .

"Advances in prices of agricultural commodities, together with a large volume of production and marketing, caused the farm income to reach a greater total in the crop year 1924-25 than in any year since 1920-21.

"September forecasts indicate that the aggregate output of all crops during the present year will be about six per cent smaller than last year, but this will probably not adversely affect farm communities since it has been just about offset by advances in agricultural prices. As a result of the successive rise in cotton, grain and animal products during the past three years, the agricultural industry has now reached a better adjustment with other industries than at any time since the war.

Railway Traffic.

"Greater traffic was handled during the fiscal year 1925 than ever before in our railroad history.

"Extensions of terminals and the problem of rate adjustments are still before us. The problems of railroad consolidations are yet to be solved. Improvement in railroad finances and services is dependent upon the solution of these problems.

"The bankers figures at the end of the year indicate a high degree of stability in a period of fairly substantial prosperity. All banking operations consistently kept pace with the increases in production, employment and prices during the year.

"Perhaps the most encouraging feature of the period was the progress made throughout the world in the stabilization of monetary systems.

Gold Standard.

"The progress in the reestablishment of the gold standard is of incalculable importance to trade which has been so severely hampered by the uncertainty resulting from exchange fluctuations.

"In this work of stabilizing the world's currencies the United States has been of great assistance to the other nations through granting of stabilization credits by our banks and flotation of loans in our security market. The gross volume of foreign securities offered in this country during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1925, amounted to $1,382,000,000 of which $292,000,000 were refunding issues and $1,090,000,000 were capital. This represents an increase of $640,000,000 in new capital over the preceding fiscal year. . . .

Exports and Imports.

"Exports and imports both showed substantial increases in the fiscal year. The excess of merchandise exports amounted to $1,041,000,000, which was larger than in either of the two preceding years.

"Exports of crude foodstuffs reached a value over twice as large as in 1923-1924. Exports of manufactures, which are less affected by changes in supply and demand than crude foodstuffs and materials increased eight per cent.

"At least some part of the expansion of our foreign trade in recent years may fairly be attributed to the increased activity of the department of commerce."

Changes in Price of Farm Products Disturbs Outlook

Washington, November 7.—Some recent price changes in farm products are an unsettling factor in the farmer's outlook, the department of agriculture points out in its November analysis of the agricultural situation.

"Prices of wheat, potatoes and various lesser foodstuffs are at a stimulating level," the department says. "The same has been true of cotton, though its price has sagged discouragingly in the last month. Recent declines in corn prices also are discouraging to producers who depend mainly upon feed grains for their income. Hogs and sheep are selling on a moderately strong market, and prices of both beef and dairy cattle have tended upward this fall."

Agriculture still meets resistance in its efforts to regain a relative equality of purchasing power with other economic enterprises. Wages and commodity prices in industry remain higher than in agriculture. The purchasing power of farm products as expressed in the department of agriculture's general index number dropped back 5 points to 88 in September. In calculating this index number the five years, 1909-1914, are used as the base of 100.

Discussing the situation by regions, the department says:

"In the east there is winding up of potato digging, corn is being husked, apples picked and wheat threshed. Harvest work has been delayed all fall by rains. Potato yields are poor but prices are strong. The dairy situation shows signs of some improvement; cows are selling higher. On the whole, financial conditions are probably rather better than last fall.

"In the south, harvesting of tobacco, corn and sweet potatoes is practically finished. Cotton picking is well along, with some damage by rain. Ginning has progressed rapidly. Truck crops are being planted, and some truck and winter grains are already growing well. The general sentiment is good except in Piedmont and western areas where drouth ruined the crops.

"The corn belt has been greatly hindered by cold weather and rains last month, and corn husking is delayed. Planting of winter wheat has also been seriously interfered with, some intended acreage having been abandoned. Winter grains look good where planted. Hog producers are optimistic as a rule. Some cattle feeders find price margins toto narrow for extensive feeding. The general tone of the region is improved over that of last fall.

"Winter wheat is planted in the wheat belt, and stands look good as a rule through Kansas and Nebraska. Spring wheat threshing is practically finished; the crop movement was heavy a month ago but has slackened. Potatoes and incidental crops bring more money than last year. The region is moderately optimistic except in areas where the crop has failed.

"Pasture in the range country has been open for the most part and is in excellent condition. Stock is on winter ranges now. Shipments of sheep diminished but cattle movement continued heavy. Sheepmen are closing another prosperous year. Cattle raisers are heartened by price advances this year and there is some restocking. However, there are still many cattlemen in difficulties.

"On the Pacific coast there has been considerable cool and dry weather the last month. Some winter wheat land in the north is going over for spring seeding. The fruit crops are excellent. Extremely heavy shipments of grapes in California are reported. The prune and raisin harvests are over. Naval oranges will begin to move this month. General conditions are fairly good."

COTTON GOODS PRICES RECOVER STRENGTH

New York, November 7.—After a sharp decline in the gray cloth division the cotton goods markets became steadier this week when raw cotton recovered from the low points of a week ago. Business has been of a filling-in character, as mills were unwilling to see ahead at the low prices quoted for unfinished lines and buyers would not bid higher. Prices on finished lines have held fairly steady, as there has been no inducement to revise prices for later spring business while there are many undelivered orders to meet.

During the week the southern power companies gave notice that mills might run another half day weekly, as some progress has been made toward filling up streams and power channels. Production has been steadily increasing. The heavy goods end of the industry is well occupied for the next 30 to 60 days and many contracts are on the books carrying well into next year.

Percales and specialty printed goods are sold ahead to the end of the year. Bleached cottons are quiet. With leading lines of sheets and pillowcases sold ahead for some weeks there has been little new trading. Cotton blanket lines are being opened for next fall at concessions from last season's prices. Wide flannelletes are well sold. Rayon mixtures are still active. Yarn markets have undergone a downward revision and more business is being done with knitters. Heavy knit underwear is closely sold ahead.

Prices current in primary markets follow: Print cloths, 28-inch 64x64s 6 7-8 cents; 64x60s, 6 5-8 cents; 38 1-2-inch 64x64s, 9 3-4 cents; brown sheetings, southern standards, 14 cents; tickings, 24 cents; denims, 19 cents; prints, 9 1-2 cents; staple ginghams, 11 1-2 cents; dress ginghams, 13 1-2@17 1-2 cents.

Indications Point to Continued Wild Speculation in Stocks

BY R. L. BARNUM

New York, November 7.—November starts out with the month just closed breaking all high monthly records for turn-over on the stock exchange, with the number of consecutive two-million share days breaking all high records, with the average price of 50 representative stocks making a new high for all time. What the new month brings remains to be seen. All indications, however, point to a continuation of the wild speculation that marked October the month of high records.

Political Praopaganda.

Looking back over the factors creating the existing situation in the stock market it must be admitted that in the beginning political propaganda played an important part. Leaders in the republican party realized in the sweeping victory of last November that if their party was to remain in power the country must experience general prosperity. Hence, every important individual connected with the administration did and said what he could to help bring about a return of prosperity. This propaganda undoubtedly helped to bring about the existing frame of mind.

To be successful, however, propaganda must have a sound foundation. Hence the real basis for the existing situation in the stock market was not political propaganda but the accumulated wealth of this country plus a sound financial and industrial structure and a promising outlook both for money and general trade.

Outlook is Good.

Here for example is the way one recognized authority sizes up the general situation and outlook at the beginning of November: "The outlook for the remainder of 1925 is for a continuation of substantial volume of business and for a large holiday trade. Some slight easing of interest rates is probable in November. Apparently the stock market is looking forward to a considerable period of easy money and of very good business." It was pointed out that "bank credit is already expanded and that an expansion of business resulting in a considerable demand for credit might change materially the speculative outlook;" adding, however, "until this happens there is slight prospect for other than technical or intermediate movements in stock prices."

This certainly makes a pleasing picture for those speculatively inclined. It says in effect that the stock market, discounting good general business and easy money is likely to continue its present pace until the speculative outlook is changed by increasing demands for credit already expanded by marked expansion in general business. This viewpoint is quoted because it reflects the prevailing opinion in Wall street's best banking circles. What are the prospects then for marked general expansion in business which is likely to change the speculative situation and outlook?

Gary's Judgment.

It must be admitted that there is no man in the country in a better position to judge the general business situation and outlook than Chairman Gary, of the United States Steel corporation. Mr. Gary recently went on record with the unqualified prediction that before May the steel industry would have more orders on hand than it could fill. This is not at all the situation and outlook that until very recently had been generally expected. What most everybody was looking for was just normal good business with facilities exceeding demand, a condition that would result in continued stability of prices which was considered the foundation for the normal good trade ahead. That, however, is something very different from what Chairman Gary said and what the stock market is now saying. Apparently Mr. Gary knew something about actual conditions not known to the average business man. What are the sources of the buying of steel that before next May will be given the steel manufacturers more orders than they can fill on prompt delivery?

Railway Traffic.

A very successful western business man who knows his own country as well as the average Wall street bank runner knows the lower end of Manhattan island arrived in Wall street today with an interesting story of what the railroads in his part of the country are doing. He said that Union Pacific for example could be seen any day by any observing passenger running from 40 to 50 solid freight trains with from 75 to 100 loaded cars, some of them using as many as three locomotives on heavy grades to keep the traffic moving. He said that Union Pacific, which had its roadbed and equipment in splendid shape to move high record traffic, would not be able to handle the regular seasonal freight of the farmers on regular schedule time; that the local papers throughout the west were already beginning, as he put it, to "holler" for freight cars to move the business now in hand; that the splendidly equipped Union Pacific was straining its roadbed, freight cars and locomotives to meet the demands for transportation; that this strain would have to be relieved by placing large orders for rails, ballast, freight cars, locomotives; that most western railroads were not in as good shape today as Union Pacific to handle the business in sight and hence would be forced in the market with orders for new equipment.

Opinion of Farmers.

He said that the farmers in the west were saying: "Well we got by this year. Another year of good crops and high prices will get us completely out of the hands of the bankers. Reckon we can afford to spend a little more than we have been spending for needed farm equipment and home requirements." This spirit on the part of the farmers he said from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast and from Canada to the gulf was responsible for the big business which the mail order houses, the manufacturers of automobiles, the manufacturers of farm implements and the railroads were now doing.

One of the most conservative and best known bankers in Wall street looking out of his window one day this week in the direction of Trinity church remarked in ending a discussion on the general situation and outlook: "Business is good—very good. Stock marketwise such a situation is always overdone and I suppose this will be no exception to the rule." He remarked that the existing frame of mind of the big outside speculating public was beginning to suggest somewhat the celebration that occurred in November of 1918 when peace was declared. Anybody who tried to stop the party, was his final remark, had his hands full.

EDITOR OF MONITOR EXPECTED IN MACON

Macon, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Macon people are planning a big reception here on Tuesday for Willis J. Abbot, editor of the Christian Science Monitor. Mr. Abbot expects to spend Tuesday afternoon and night here, leaving at a late hour for Brunswick.

TOPS

Some stocks have already reached their tops and reversed their trend so are a sale on all rallies for 10 to 40 points decline. Some others are nearing this point and will also be a sale. Many persons holding stocks will then overstay their market and suffer disastrous losses instead of reaping expected profits. You should know at once whether your stock is likely to advance further or decline 10-20-30 or more points. You will need my advices to safeguard your interests.

Many patrons have availed themselves of my offer in last Sunday's announcement herein. The offer is still open. Three months' subscription for two times a week Advisory Market Letters for only $10.00, and a chance to procure a $25.00 premium for a small and simple effort on your part. If you desire further particulars ask for my 24-page booklet. It is FREE. I urge you not to delay getting my Market Letters because some BIG SURPRISES are near at hand. These mean BIG PROFITS for my patrons. Don't delay or postpone, ACT. Do it TODAY.

Note—Will Cotton reach 18c?

U. S. COTTON CROP REPORT BRANDED GUESS-WORK

Former Federal Employee Flays Estimating System

BY H. PARKER WILLIS.

New York, November 7.—The desire to foresee the future is a trait which has been characteristic of the human race in all generations and has not lost any of its force in recent years. From decade to decade it assumes new forms, but in the business world it settled down a good while ago into the socalled "forecast" system. In this, upon a supposedly "scientific" basis, attempt was made to foreshadow probabilities in connection with prices, production, distribution and exchange.

Today we have an infinite variety of such forecasts, but among the oldest and most firmly established of them all is that which the government itself sanctions and issues in connection with our agricultural products. Moreover, in this government system of forecasting, the most conspicuous place is occupied by a single product—cotton—which by its conditions of production and its relatively high value in small compass, as well as by the commanding position which the United States holds in the cotton world, is of unusual importance to the country as a current asset.

System Is Questioned.

Although in years past, the government reports on cotton have often been called in question, dissatisfaction with them has perhaps never been so acute as it is today, nor has it originated in quarters of such undoubted influence and authenticity as those which today are giving rise to complaint directed against the system itself. Within the past two months, a variety of experts, both foreign and domestic, have attacked both the personnel which is engaged in cotton reporting, the statistical methods employed, and the accuracy of the results announced to the world.

Cotton manufacturers in convention assembled have transmitted protests against the entire system of reporting and have asked that it should be abolished. As usual, they have been sharply taken to task by agricultural interests which have retorted that the complaint of the manufacturers is due to their desire to see quotations lower in the market, whereas the department of agriculture is supposed to be working in the interest of the farmer. And yet, singularly enough, just at the time that such criticisms are being made, the department of agriculture has been violently attacked by southern interests which complain that its figures have been altogether too high, and that its work has resulted in giving to the farmer a good deal less income than he ought to have had.

Basis of Controversy.

Just what is the basis of this controversy? The manufacturers and—so far their opinion gets a hearing—the speculative community, argue that the government ought not to give out "guesses" on the crops or anything else, but that it ought to give out facts and facts only. In other words, the critics assert that they have nothing to say, so long as the government promulgates only ascertained knowledge on any subject, and that what they object to is merely the publication of inferences.

Of course this at once raises the question: Exactly what is it that the department of agriculture ascertains and how does it get the data? That question should be definitely answered in the mind of every observer, whether farmer, speculator or manufacturer, since only on such a basis is he able to make a fair estimate of the department's work.

The annual returns of the department of agriculture are furnished by the crop reporting board of that department, and include the following elements: (1) An annual figure, published in June and designed to show the acreage planted to cotton; (2) returns obtained semi-monthly from a large number of individuals throughout the cotton-growing region with reference to what is called "condition" of cotton; (3) figures obtained and published at the end of October showing the amount of acreage abandoned as the result of unfavorable conditions, insect damage and the like. From other sources the government obtains and publishes the following data which are, of course, taken into account by the crop reporting board: (1) Weather conditions and rainfall from day to day; (2) amount of cotton crop actually ginned at ginning establishments from the beginning of the ginning season, published monthly thereafter; (3) stocks of cotton on hand at various points as well as in the mills. Of these various data, all may be taken to represent approximations to fact except one—the reports of condition. It is broadly true, therefore, that complaints of critics center upon this specific factor in the whole situation.

"Condition" reports are simply the estimate in terms of percentage furnished by an ordinary observer in a locality concerning the relative position of the crop as compared with normal, in his own county, township or other region to which he is limited. For example, "A" is a correspondent of the department of agriculture who operates a general store at some point in Peachtree county, Ga. "A" writes, semi-monthly, to the department of agriculture on a blank prepared for the purpose and expresses the opinion at a certain date that the condition of cotton at the time of writing is, say 75. By this he is instructed to mean 75 per cent of a satisfactory or "normal" crop, a normal crop being according to the department a crop "containing all the elements of perfectness."

As a matter of fact, the correspondent usually has his own idea of what a normal crop is and his figure is based on that theoretical standard. Now suppose similar estimates of condition to be received from many thousands of other persons and averaged—it may be that the final figure will be 72.8 per cent. What does this men? It has no meaning to the average mind until translated into terms of bales of cotton.

In order to give it a meaning, therefore, it is necessary to convert it to a basis of "forecast." Here two other elements enter into the situation. The first is acreage. If the number of acres planted this year is, say 36,000,000 as ascertained in the spring, and if last year it was, say, 32,000,000, evidently a "normal crop" on 36,000,000 acres will be something very different from a normal crop on 32,000,000 acres—greater by one-eighth in fact.

Estimated Bale Yield.

The second factor which must likewise be taken into account is the estimated bale yield per acre. This latter can be obtained only throught figures based upon past experience—the so-called "pars" which the department uses. If, for example, an average yield over the past five years is 150 pounds per acre, and if this year's figures for acreage show 36,000,000 acres, evidently the product of these two figures would give the total yield provided the "condition" were the same as that which on the average furnished the average yield per acre.

When, therefore, the correspondents report the condition of 72.8 per cent already taken as an example in our hypothesis, it is easy enough to apply this to the theoretical yield which would be obtained with the acreage and par already assumed, and from that to forecast the crop yield for the season. Of course, the sources of error in any such proceeding are manifold, and the only justification that could be found for putting forward any such figure is the belief that errors on the part of the various reporters or correspondents tend to offset one another. But there still remains always the presence of a fundamental error, due to the fact that the department has no knowledge of the number of acres abandoned until late in the season.

Some Correctives.

There are, obviously, some correctives that may be applied to the process of figuring thus indicated. For example, the department has recently stated that in making up its October figures for the current crop—year, 1925—it pursued the following process:

1. Separate estimates were secured from ginners and crop correspondents throughout the cotton belt as to the percentage of the cotton crop ginned to October 1, which were applied to reported census ginnings to October 1.

2. Estimates of its correspondents as to the percentage of the crop picked to October 1, which, after allowing for a spread between picking and ginning, based on previous records, were applied to census ginning for the same date.

3. Reports on the condition of the crop from its several corps of correspondents, computed in same manner as previous reports this year.

4. Estimates of yield per acre based on reports as to the probable average yield per acre applied to acreage, after allowing for average abandonment, except in those states, such as Texas, where the abandonment was known to be considerably more than average, and Oklahoma, where it was known to be less than average.

5. Estimates of actual bales ginned and to be ginned, in all important cotton counties, reported by key reporters, many of whom were leading farmers, country bankers and ginners.

6. Reports from agricultural statisticians, based on personal field observations and travel. In most of the states the returns from various sources were in reasonably close accord, so at least it is stated by the representatives of the department.

But, in looking over this account of method, the careful reader will, of course, bear in mind that there is nothing there which in any way supplies the lack of absolute fact data as to acreage abandoned, or which does more than give a theoretical basis for the socalled "par" figure which is used in computing the forecast. So the question recurs: Ought the government to give its sanction to figures which contain so many possibilities of error and probably so far off from the truth at the time they are given out—which, therefore, so profounding affect the property rights of a great number of people?

Practical men will usually answer this question by submitting it to the test of facts and experience. They will say that if in fact the government has succeeded in coming very close to the figures and is better or more accurate than private persons it ought to go on doing the work, and if not, it should discontinue.

So the real decision comes down to the question: Has the department always told the truth as it saw it and has this truth as seen by the department coincided with real facts? As to the first question the answer must be unqualifiedly in the negative. From time to time, grave scandals have developed affecting the personal honesty or competency of men in the government service. Some years ago it was necessary to clear out the crop reporting bureau completely, because of the collusion which had developed there between officials and speculators on the outside.

Occasionally, since that period, drastic changes in personnel either in direct connection with crop reporting or in connection with the weather service, or elsewhere, have been necessary. And yet no human institution is perfect. If these errors were merely sporadic, they could be perhaps overlooked, for the sake of the benefit to be derived from the system itself. But how has the actual reporting result compared with the facts in the case? Fortunately, this question can be answered with very substantial accuracy because of the elaborate statistics on ginning and consumption of cotton which make possible a check after the close of the season. In the following table an effort is made to show briefly some comparative figures designed to test the work of the department:

1920—11,450,000	12,987,000	13,439,603
1921— 8,433,000	8,340,000	7,953,641
1922—11,065,000	9,964,000	9,762,069
1923—11,412,000	10,061,000	10,128,478
1924—12,144,000	13,153,000	13,619,000
1925—14,339,000	.....	.....

Very little analysis of these figures is called for. It takes but a casual scrutiny of them to show that the department has been frequently wide of the mark by amounts running as high as 20 to 25% of the eventual crop. Even in its closing figure for the year, when it has the advantage of statistics for cotton ginning which have taken in a large percentage of the crop, it is often well out in its reckoning. The accompanying graph shows that it has been no better than private reporters. If its returns are to be taken on their face value few business houses would ever be willing to sustain a service which could not get nearer to the facts than the department of agriculture has done—whether as a result of incompetency or the innate difficulty of the problem is a secondary question.

Reliance of Market.

But, say the inquirer, is not this the only reliance of the market? Is it not the only source of information as to yields? Not at all! There are in existence at least a dozen private crop reports prepared by much the same methods that are employed by the department of agriculture. Their average figures over a series of years are decidedly closer to the real yield than is the department's. The danger that they may be sophisticated or dishonestly "doctored" is present always just as it is in the case of the government's own figures.

But the effect of such doctoring is vastly less upon current prices than is a similar error in the case of the government's own figures—such is the prestige of government authority. Unquestionably, however, the government should never throw the farmer into a position in which he has to depend for his opinion about the crop upon some speculator or speculative market. But at the present time the farmer is represented by numerous strong, vigorous and well equipped cooperative associations, some of which already make their own estimates, while all could readily do so with a very moderate amount of expense.

Should Give Facts.

What may reasonably be expected is that the government shall enable every man to be his own crop estimater. To that end it should continue to publish the numerous series of facts relating to weather, ginning, acreage, and a variety of other matters which it already puts out, and it should endeavor to make them even more inclusive and earlier than heretofore.

It should get its acreage by a method as near approaching to census accuracy as is possible, and it should get its abandoned acreage in the same way, and much earlier, than at present. It might well increase the scope and detail of its weather reports.

If to these facts it should then add some reliable measure of insect infestation, designed to afford a basis of knowledge as to the percentage of damage inflicted by the boll weevil and in other similar ways, it would still further improve the character of the service it was rendering to the community. Most of the facts so furnished would be (as those which are now supplied are today) susceptible of "checking up" by outsiders.

Every man could then become his own crop estimater and forecaster upon a reasonably assured basis, if he chose to do so, and doubtless would do so if at any time he became doubtful or suspicious of the estimates already placed at his disposal by existing agencies. The government could not be impugned for anything it did in that case, save for obvious false reports as to facts, which would be few and easily corrected.

Why should we not put our cotton and other crop reports on this business basis and thereby eliminate the unfairness which grows out of the present method of government guessing? As it stands, government reports are of no benefit to anybody but the more reckless speculator or to the "operator" who has obtained, as some have from time to time, "inside knowledge" of what is going on at Washington.

Advantages and Meaning Of 'No Par Value' Stock Told

BY JOEL HUNTER.

During recent years several of the progressive states have authorized the issue by corporations of common stock with no par value. This means only that when a subscriber to the stock of a new corporation pays his subscription the negotiable receipt (otherwise known as stock certificate) issued to him states that he is the owner of one or more shares of a total issue of so many shares of the common stock of the corporation, without stating in the certificate how many dollars were paid or what a share was supposed to be worth at that time. If the corporation issued 1,000 shares and his certificate states that he owns 100 shares, he is the owner of one-tenth of the net assets whatever they may be.

A holder of a certificate of stock, whether he be an original subscriber or subsequent purchaser, cannot demand that the corporation return to him the amount paid for his stock. He is entitled to receive his pro-rata of any dividends paid and if the corporation is liquidated he will receive his pro-rata—it may be less and it may be more than was paid originally. The corporation is under no obligation to pay to him anything except his pro-rata, either of earnings or in the distribution of assets.

Therefore, to attempt to express the value of a share of common stock in the face of a certificate is without meaning, but it may be misleading.

The value of a share of common stock in a corporation is its pro-rata of the corporation's net assets, and merely writing or printing in the face of the certificate the amount that was originally paid for the share adds nothing to its present value.

Stock with no-par value affords greater protection to the buyer for it puts him on notice to inquire concerning its value before investing his money.

Where stock is listed on an exchange and sales are made through the exchange, the price is public information and is fixed by the demand. Having a par value or no-par value makes little difference in such a transaction, though the actual value of the stock may be quite different from the market price.

But where a stock is not listed or dealt in on an exchange, as is the case with stocks of most southern corporations, the purchase is a private transaction with nothing to guide the contracting parties but their own judgment. An inexperienced buyer is likely to take as a guarantee of worth the statement of par value engraved or lithographed on a certificate which has been signed by the president and secretary under the corporate seal of the company.

Why should he not do so if there is any real meaning to the statement?

There seems to be an impression that having no-par value stock would enable a corporation or its stockholders to evade taxes. As taxes are based on values at the time of assessment, it is not quite clear how the omission of a statemet of original or nominal value could aid the taxpayer.

One of the reasons why so many Georgia businesses incorporate in other states is that non-par stock may not be issued by a Georgia business corporation. Such a form of stock is adapted to many organizations and as the certificates state no value, it is an honest method of showing the interest of stockholders. In a report on this subject by an emident authority it is stated that:

"There are reported to be some 500,000 corporations in the United States. The evidence of an individual's ownership in a corporation is a certificate of stock bearing ordinarily a so-called par value for the single share. The par value is usually $100 or some fraction of it. Within the last few years many shares have been issued which do not have anywhere upon them the tag of par value. The principal advantages of no par value stock over par value shares are first, the corporation may sell them at any price obtainable; second, they represent at all times a fractional interest in the business without attempting to put a value on this interest, and third, the buyer is not misled as to the potential value of the shares."

There is no good reason why the people of Georgia should have to go to another state when they want to incorporate with a no-par value stock. We should encourage all Georgia undertakings to incorporate under our own laws, to have their headquarters here and to do business here. There are some who have mistakenly thought that there must be something sinister in having a no-par value capital stock. That an evasion of some corporate duty was contemplated, or that the corporation was preparing to grant favors to some or inflict penalties upon others. When it is remembered that the certificate of stock does not represent any more than a fractional interest in the net worth of the corporation, it does not appear any easier to do wrong under a no-par value form than under a par-value form.

By allowing the issue of no-par stock in Georgia, many corporations which now go to the other states for charters would incorporate in Georgia, adding to the state's revenue by paying incorporation fees here.

But an even greater advantage would be the domestication of corporations doing business in Georgia, causing the owners and officers to feel a greater personal interest in the upbuilding and general welfare of the state. In other words it would convert aliens into citizens.

Again, it may be said that a corporation shrinks from admitting that its stock is worth less than what was paid for it. This is probably true, but it is also true that it is greatly to the interest of the shareholder to know what his security is actually worth. To illustrate this, let us take a corporation organized under the par value form with a capital stock of $500,000 each share having a par value of $100. In other words 5,000 shares worth $100 each, but in reality each share being worth one five thousandth of the net worth of the corporation. The corporation prepares its annual balance sheet and shows a net worth of $550,000. Then each share is actually worth one five thousandth of $550,000. When the next balance sheet is prepared it may show $490,000 net worth, in which case each share would be worth one five thousandth of $490,000; but all this time the stockholder is probably of the opinion that, if he has ten shares he's really got $1,000. All he has is a fractional interest with a right to participate in such dividends as are earned and declared. The general use of a no-par value form in such corporations as it is peculiarly appropriate to, would be a good thing for the state of Georgia in taxes and fees and for its business men in more freedom of operation.

Mining and Mill Industry Shows Big Improvement

Birmingham, Ala., November 7.—(By the Associated Press.)—Alabama mines and mills during the week were called upon for increased quantities of their products and the industrial situation as a consequence took on an even more roseate complexion.

The mining industry took the lead among the industries for the week. Demand, which for many weeks during the summer, was unusually slack, has suddenly assumed proportions which will assure activity lasting several months on the face of orders already booked.

Pig iron quotations ranged from $21 to $21.50 per ton for No. 2 foundry. Foundry interests report they have sold well into the first quarter of next year and that surplus stocks will be practically wiped out by the end of 1925 with prospects that the amount of iron produced weekly must be increased.

The Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron company's Gadsden furnace No. 1 will be blown in next week. Two other furnaces under repair in the district also will go back into commission in order to meet the fast-growing demands for metal.

Steel in Demand.

Steel in all shapes is in heavy demand. Some delays are being experienced in shipping part of the steel especially to Florida where embargoes have been resorted to.

Coke demand is still very strong, quotations having taken a spurt to $6 and $6.50 per ton. The make is being shipped in every direction from the Birmingham district. Much of the Alabama coke production will soon be moving to the east where it will be accepted to substitute by the anthracite consumers. All coke being manufactured here is finding ready market.

Alabama coal mines are now being operated on a six-day-a-week schedule with few exceptions. Large quantities of coal are being converted into coke.

Shortage of Cars.

Unless the car shortage which is becoming more noticeable daily is too acute Alabama promises to establish a heavy record for the year.

The New Castle Coal company has gone on a six-day-a-week basis. Each day a trainload of coal leaves the mines whose output is around 1,400 tons every 24 hours. Other companies in the district which have been idle or have been working only two or three days each week have gone on a similar scale.

According to the bureau of coal economics of the National City association in a report for the week ending October 24, the greatest weekly bituminous production was reached with 12,000,000 net tons. The tonnage mined during the weeks of October 10 and October 17 was 11,767,000 net tons and 11,681,000 net tons, respectively.

Demand for Coal.

During the last few weeks railroads have increased their demand for coal fully 50 per cent. The domestic demand also has taken a substantial jump.

The record of 1924, annual output of 19,615,931 tons, is expected to be equalled, if not exceeded, in 1925.

Alabama's production of coal for the week ending October 17 amounted to 396,000 tons. Production for the week following is estimated at more than 400,000 tons.

Cement plants are going at capacity speed with heavy future demands. The make is moving steadily.

Brick kilns are producing consistently with a big unfilled tonnage.

Stock Market Defies Analysis, Goes Contrary To All Rules Which Have Governed Past

Speculators Seek Inactive Issues and Buy Recklessly, Expecting Stocks To Move in Short Time.

BY C. H. PLATT.

New York, November 7.—(Special to The Constitution.)—Last Tuesday being a holiday, the speculative element had an extra day of consideration to give to their commitments and evidently decided to go in deeper, for there was no cessation of boiling activity and fireworks. It remains a market that defies analysis and goes contrary to all the rules that have governed it in the past, except that the probability still remains that as it is bigger and more prolonged so will the break be more extensive and more drastic when it does eventuate.

Traders have ceased to look at intrinsic values, for those stocks that seem too high are just the ones that continue to go higher. Pools are, to a great extent, in control, and will not take profits until some idea of the tax cut is gained with especial emphasis on whether it will be retroactive for 1925 or not.

Public Interested.

The public has become thoroughly impressed with the fact that a bull market is in progress and are buying everything on the deductive theory that under present circumstances the stocks will all move ultimately. It seems to be a fair rule to follow, despite the fact that warnings are becoming more and more insistent from conservative sources. There is a tremendous interest in the market from day to day, and as this interest enlarges it finally results in purchases by men and women who have not the slighest business in the market and who throw their funds into the whirlpool of speculation on tips and rumors which are not only baseless, but in many instances the wildest exaggerations.

Speculators are combing the financial pages looking for stocks that have not yet had good moves and are buying them recklessly, which is taking the market rapidly out of control and eliminating the orderliness that has prevailed to date.

Bucket Shops Quit.

Most of the bucket shops have gone out of existence and buying of stocks now has a real effect on prices, whereas when the bucketeers flourished purchases and sales were "written on the cuff" and did not in any way affect prices or volume.

The short interest is now actual and has to be covered some time, while the longs will of a certainty take their profits in the due course of time. The technical, or speculative, position of the market is, therefore, reasonably good, as is indicated by an urgent demand for stocks in the loan crowd. This factor being as it is and no signs of a break appearing on the "tape," higher prices seem probable with a steady increase in the volume of trading.

The mechanical facilities of the stock exchange are crowded to the limit now, but will be somewhat relieved by the addition of 25 seats and a further segregation of stocks into more divisions.

Long Traders Mistake.

Long traders who for months have been looking for the top and making many costly mistakes have given up hope of being able to pick the proper place to sell and are carrying their lines into levels which they believe to be entirely too high and are only willing to sell on a 5 or 10 point drop from figures at which they would formerly have sold with the greatest dispatch and satisfaction. Averages are going up steadily although there has been decided weakness in some issues. The advances have been so large among the leaders that minor recessions in inactive divisions do not affect the whole price list.

While there is, of course, profit-taking going on constantly, there are really more short sales than profit-taking sales and this tends to stabilize the market and hold gains once made. It has always been held a Wall street truism that when a stock should be sold it is a good short sale, but while this has been practiced assiduously it has not worked out with any degree of success.

Reasons for Buoyancy.

Incessant merger talk continues, and this, combined with a steady flow of increased dividends, much calling of preferred stock and redemption of bonds, more money than was ever before available for stock market operations and speculation, give excellent reasons for buoyancy and high prices and because stocks are high is not a sign that they will react.

Radio companies report the best business in their history, public utilities have sold so much stock to customers that they do not fear any adverse legislation, mail order houses and chain stores are doing a record-breaking business and foreign countries with which we have a large volume of trade, are improving their buying postion. The whole outlook is cheerful, just now.

The Italian commission arrived without any flourish of trumpets and is making rapid progress towards some settlement of the Italian debt. The French debt fiasco has probably had a salutary effect.

Oils Continue Gain.

The condition of the oil companies continues to improve and we have the peculiar condition of lower gasoline in stock in the face of declining consumption. Many of the oils have been so disappointing to holders that they have sold out their stocks at lower levels than are now prevailing and as the advance really begins may be expected to came back into the market, for without doubt the oils have a speculative attraction not held by any other group of stocks. Earnings of the companies are tremendous and there is every likelihood of augmented dividends following the turn of the year, with some mergers and a number of recapitalizations with accompanying stock dividends.

Motors retain their leadership and pyrotechnical displays in these issues have become so common as to be expected daily. Earnings are unquestionably remarkable and optimists claim that market prices are fully warranted by them and by asset position. Nevertheless the shrewdest interests predict a climax almost any time in these stocks. Heavy sales of automobiles presuppose great earnings next year for the tire stocks and some of these are being groomed to take the place of the motors when the end comes.

Crude Rubber Good.

Some promise is held out by England that more rubber will be allowed to come over, which alleviation is probably based on the active steps being taken by American tiremakers to provide for their own supplies of crude rubber. Many of the motor companies are reducing their schedule of production, because the winter season approaches, but Ford continues to increase production. There could hardly be a better indication of the underlying financial strength of the nation.

Money has ruled steady at around five per cent, but the supply is plentiful and likely to continue so indefinitely. There is nothing in sight to justify expectation of tight money and loans for over the year end are numerous at prevailing rates.

The railroads are inclined to inactivity although there is a large volume of trading unnoticed because of unusual strength. Prospects of a compromise on the St. Paul reorganization are believed to be good and many of the northwest rails have responded to the better feeling that prevails for a clearing up of this unpleasant situation. September earnings were at very high levels and it is anticipated that October reports, when available, will be even better.

Brokers Indorse Rails.

Brokerage houses are advising customers to switch from industrials to the railroad shares, but without any great success to date. The public buys after moves are started rather than before. The equipment shares are becoming strong as a result of large and increasing orders from the roads. The best kind of buying is evident in these issues and the market is responsive to it as can be noted in the daily quotations for them. A number of the equipment companies have for several years been spending large sums in experimental work which is now understood to have culminated in the production of engines for which a permanent demand is known.

Copper is strong at 14 7-8 with producers hesitant to sell even at that figure. Other metals are also showing an upward tendency and the mining issues are coming more and more into the public eye. The movement is ponderous and slow, but as it accelerates on earnings reports now being made public, it is possible that the same sort of fireworks will develop in the mining shares as has been seen in the motors.

Bonds Listless.

The bond market is somewhat listless with a sagging tendency in the municipals and government issues. The weakness in tax free issues is founded on expected tax reduction and when this reduction is an actuality bond dealers expect a booming market in industrial, rail and foreign issues. Most of the foreigns have been weak with the exception of the Germans. There is some probability that this condition will continue for a while but when the full effect of the raising of the English embargo on bond flotations begins to be felt it will likely cause strength in foreign bonds on this market. The American investor has insisted on high yields from foreign issues. The English investor is satisfied with small returns. When the bonds sell high in London they may be expected to sell high here also.

Steel Shows Gain.

A number of the steel companies are operating at 100 per cent capacity and the companies as a whole had more orders November 1 than at any time for the past six months. Prices are going up and Steel common reached its highest price since 1917. Unfilled orders show a steady advance, output is larger, users are buying ahead and October shipments and orders were the greatest for the year since May.

Cotton recovered somewhat from the break of a week ago. This was brought about to a great extent through the fact that southern planters are holding. Cables have been better and this coupled with rain storms in the western part of the belt have helped prices. It its known that many buying orders have been placed under the market, but cotton is low enough in viw of good cotton cloth trade in sight. Speculators are waiting anxiously for Monday's report.

The Day in Finance

BY R. L. BARNUM

Present Stock Market Seen to Differ From Any Bull Markets of the Past 25 Years.

New York, November 7.—Trained stock market observers who have been studying the market from the side lines for at least 25 years realize that every day, from the viewpoint of the interest being shown by the big outside speculating public, the movement now under way is becoming more and more like some of the wild war and after war markets and the markets of 1906 and 1901. In one very conspicuous way, however, the stock market now being witnessed is very different from any of the bull markets of the past 25 years.

The big bull market of 1901 had its foundation in the economies practiced throughout the country for five years following the panic of 1893 and was fed by returning prosperity, plus the wide industrial company and railroad mergers of that period. The big bull market of 1906 was based on a prolonged period of record-breaking prosperity, plus the widespread desire to get out of the market while the going was good and before the plainly approaching storm of 1907 broke. The big bull markets between 1914 and 1918 were based on war profits and the one of 1919 on post-war inflation. The big bull market now under way is based primarily on easy money, but is being helped along by returning prosperity, by distribution of profits already accumulated in the form of initial dividends, extra cash dividends and stock dividends and by rumors of various railroad and industrial company consolidations.

Thus, as far as the foundation is concerned, aside from our large accumulated wealth and easy money there is no striking difference between the existing bull stock market and other bull markets of the past 25 years. In the matter of leadership, however, conditions are strikingly different from any heretofore experienced.

In the big bull market of 1901 J. P. Morgan and his associates were forming the United States Steel corporation as the last word in the industrial mergers of that period, already perfected and in the railroad world E. H. Harriman and his followers were buying control of Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific and other systems, and Morgan and Harriman were employing in their stock market operations James R. Keene, Edwin Hawley and other market experts of that period. At the same time John W. Gates, D. G. Reid, William H. Moore, James H. Moore and many others whose names might be mentioned were plunging in the stock market on their own account, largely with the profits made from the United States Steel merger and other similar consolidations.

In 1906 it was no secret that men like E. H. Harriman, William Rockefeller, H. H. Rogers and Jacob H. Schiff were running the stock market, with Gates and Reid and other large individual plungers playing an important part. In the war and after-war markets individuals, such as B. M. Baruch and Jesse Livermore, were prominent. The curious thing about the existing bull market is that it has been going on without any recognized leadership on the part of bankers, industrial or railroad men, or individuals, such as was plainly in evidence in every other bull market in the past 25 years, with the possible exception of 1919.

One day this week, trading in the last hour suddenly switched from the motors to the steel shares, strongly suggesting leadership. What happened was that one individual, who is trading heavily in the stock market, threw over a large line of General Motors and at the same time began to buy Steel common. This occurred at a time when the technical condition of the motor stock was weak because of continued wild advances and when the weekly trade reviews on iron and steel had just made public extremely optimistic statements. Undoubtedly this heavy selling in one direction and heavy buying in another by the individual trader in question at exactly the right time was leadership which was followed. But the point is that the individual trader was merely playing his own hand without any thought of leadership. The next morning the market started off without any more signs of leadership than have been witnessed for weeks and months past.

The facts are that the existing market is so big that it is bigger than any individual or group of individuals now operating in it. For example, it is known that the trader who successfully sold motor stocks one day this week while buying steel shares made a costly experiment some weeks ago in trying to start an upward price movement in Baldwin. At that time the railway equipment business was bad and getting worse. Fundumentals were not right for an upward price movement in the railway equipment shares. The trader in question found to his sorrow that the market for these shares was against him and much bigger than he was, so he had to quit with a very heavy loss.

Aside from the big public interest that is now in the stock market which is likely as not to go against assumed leadership there are now close to six hundred individual stocks being traded in in one day, whereas back in the bull market of 1901, on the biggest day, the trading was only in 169 different issues. In 1901 if the leaders in the stock market started Steel common, Union Pacific, Amalgamated Copper and a few other stocks going in one direction other stocks would follow. Today the stock market is so big and broad that stocks in one or more groups which have been advancing too rapidly sell off while stocks in other groups are advancing. Under such conditions old-time stock market leadership is not possible.

In the Pujo congressional investigation of the money trust and allied interests which was conducted shortly before the war and which led up to the passing of the federal reserve act, it was found that only 8 per cent of the turnover in a normal stock market represented buying or selling by the big outside investing public. But at that time the outstanding bonds of our government only footed up $1,000,000,000. During the war this indebtedness was increased to $20,000,000,000, with bonds placed in the hands of 22,000,000 individual investors, most of whom then learned for the first time what it meant to buy and sell securities.

The real basis of the existing stock market is abundance of cheap money. Good securities are just a form of money which recently has had more earning power than actual cash. This condition brought the recently educated public into the market until the public finally got the bit in its teeth, speculatively, and is now running away.

BEAR HUNTING SEASON ON IN GEORGIA SWAMPS

Waycross, Ga., November 7.—(AP) The season for bear hunting in the Okeefeenokee and Altamaha swamps is just in the offing, and sportsmen here and in other south Georgia cities are preparing to track the shaggy game ere long.

For years the scene of hunting by sportsmen from all sections, the great swamp of south Georgia is expected to be visited by a number of bear hunting parties again this season. The two swamps spread north and south more than 75 miles.

Lying about 10 miles southwest of Waycross, the Okeefeenokee swamp is reached by a narrow road which will accommodate only one vehicle at a time. This trail leads into the northern end, but the principal entrance is by the town of Hopkins.

From this point the parties make their way through the swamp, which is thickly choked with large cypress trees. Flat-bottomed boats are the most desirable means of locomotion. These crude craft are propelled by poles.

Not infrequently a bear can be seen at a great distance, but the heavy swamp growth makes a clear shot practically impossible. Bruin has also been known to suddenly appear within a few feet of hunters, before his near-sighted eyes could detect their presence.

Veteran hunters in these swamps have come to know a man whose existence since boyhood has been gained in this environment. An aged guide, Perry Barber, has been employed for years to lead hunters here. His father, Obadiah Barber, was known to the hunters of the preceding generation.

PEACH COUNTY PLANS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Fort Valley, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—A committee from Fort Valley Kiwanis club composed of Glenmore Green, Mayor R. D. Hale and R. L. Marchman are canvassing Peach county for a fund of not less than $7,500 per year for three years to insure the organization of a Peach County Chamber of Commerce at once, that being the most crying need in this section.

A fund of $8,160 or $2,720 per year for three years was subscribed at the Kiwanis' luncheon, the committee will collect the funds and it is expected that the Peach County Chamber of Commerce will be launched with an expert secretary at once.

LIVINGSTON FIRM GETS NEW PARTNER

Walter Hopkins, well-known Atlantan, has become a general partner in the firm of Livingston and company, of New York, cotton and stock brokers, who operate a branch establishment in Atlanta. He has been associated with the firm for two years as manger of the Atlanta branch and his firm membership will not affect his local status and he will continue in charge of the Atlanta establishment, at 58 N. Forsyth street, in addition to general supervision of other southern branch offices.

WALTER HOPKINS.

The announcement of Mr. Hopkins' promotion created much interest in Atlanta business and financial circles, with which he is prominently identified. He has been a resident of Atlanta for the past 15 years and before entering the stock brokerage business was a prominent figure in the automotive field.

The firm of Livingston and company is one of the largest and oldest Wall street houses, but has been operating in the south for only two years. The firm now operates branches in Richmond, Norfolk, Greensboro, Charlotte, Augusta, Birmingham and Atlanta. In addition to these it maintains upwards of one hundred branch houses in other sections of the country and does a business running into millions each year.

TRIAL OF ALLEGED AIDES OF CHAPMAN SET FOR JANUARY

Trial of Abe Silverstein and Dominick Didato, charged with aiding Gerald Chapman to escape from St. Mary's hospital in Athens, has been postponed until the second Monday in January, it was announced Saturday at the office of Solicitor General Clint Hager.

The men were scheduled to face a court at Athens on November 11, but inability of the government to marshal its witnesses on such short notice forced postponement, it was said. Mr. Hager and assistants from headquarters of the federal court of the northern district of Georgia will prosecute the case.

Silverstein and Didato are charged with having brought more than $6,000 to Athens to aid Chapman in escaping, but so far as has been divulged by officers working on the case, none of the money was spent—or at least no trace of the money was found. Officials declined to discuss details of the prosecution but it is thought that the men will face a net of circumstantial evidence which has been garnered by secret service operatives since Chapman made his sensational "death bed" escape from the hospital.

Chapman escaped from the Atlanta federal penitentiary March 27, 1923, with Frank Gray. Chapman was wounded in a gun fight with federal officers near Athens and was placed in the hospital, presumably seriously hurt. Gray was recaptured.

Silverstein and Didato will face charges of assisting Chapman in his scheme to get away from authorities there.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe has ordered 74,000 tons of rails from the Colorado Fuel and Iron company.

Southern Gas and Power corporation is completing negotiations for the purchase of several important gas properties in New York state, Pennsylvania and Maryland. It now controls gas companies in Georgia, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina and Alabama. New financing will be done in connection with these purchases. It is expected additional issues of class A stock and convertible notes will be offered in New York within the next few weeks.

Buy Christmas Gifts on

The "Lay-Away Plan"

Christmas is getting into the air. Very soon it will penetrate into the innermost soul of all of us. None the less, it is human, all too human, to postpone. The climax is a mad rush to buy gifts for everybody in no time at all before THE day. Frequently we are too exhausted to enjoy Christmas at all.

There is a better way. It is the "Lay-Away" way or plan. It is better also in so far as paying is concerned. We have devised a neat and convenient plan.

Buy your gifts NOW. Make a small deposit. We will store them free of charge. Pay a small amount weekly until Christmas, when we will deliver the gifts to you or to the happy recipients.

Cooperative Apartment To Become Popular Here

BY PAUL JONES.

The cooperative apartment, which has been gaining a more popular hold upon the people of New York, Chicago, Cleveland and other points in the east and middle west, is expected by local real estate men soon to take a hold upon Atlanta home-seekers.

The idea of selling a portion of a large multiple unit dwelling to each of its tenants probably was an offshoot from the plan evolved many years ago in Europe to establish cooperative stores, markets, packing houses, laundries and other establishments that could be operated to greater advantage under the greatly increased purchasing power and the largely increased efficiency of a joint staff of operatives, and from reports that have been sent out from the cities named above the idea has proven a success in every sence of the word.

The fundamental basis for the cooperative apartment is identical with that of the stores and the laundries increased purchasing power and reduction of rates because of this community buying power. The community employment of servants and operatives also aids the efficient operation of the plan.

With the economical question disposed of promoters of the plan found themselves face to face with other problems that approached very closely that of ecomonics in gravity.

Legal Questions Involved.

There were various legal questions that confronted property owners who held "slices of air" and who found themselves facing questions entirely new in the realty world. The rights of the owner of an apartment on the fourth floor, as related to those of the owner directly over him and the neighbor occupying the apartment on the floor below brought up many knotty problems for the lawyers. Special rules had to be made for the conduct of these modernly devised dwellings and special laws are said to have been framed to protect the interests of all tenants on a basis of equity.

Disposing of the legal points affecting the community dwelling, the joint owners who were pioneers in the establishment of these modern residences found that the social aspect of the matter loomed up big and troublesome. The owner of a dwelling on floor five might possibly object to a prospective purchaser who wished to buy an apartment of the sixth or the fourth floor. One of the big ideas in the cooperative apartment, it was stated, was the preservation of the social standard of "neighborhood," and one of the main privileges to be included in the purchase of the dwelling was that of being allowed to select one's neighbors or fellow tenants.

This privilege has been preserved in the cooperative apartments to a satisfying degree, according to reports, and it is difficult for uncongenial and unsuited people to join a "neighborhood" in one of these apartment buildings. The holders of units under the cooperative plan have the power to say to a very large extent to whom property shall be sold and who shall be admitted as dwellers and property owners.

Experience has taught many things about operation of cooperative apartments, such as the community laundry, the joint payment of menials, the cooperative cafe and the advantageous features of the joint purchase of food and supplies under the increased purchasing power of the community dwelling. Those who have studied the new type of residence do not hesitate to predict that it will become increasingly popular with busy people in cities who are compelled to conserve both time and money.

That the cooperative apartment is not confined in its successful operation to large cities has been demonstrated by the fact that in several of the smaller cities and towns the idea has taken hold and has become highly successful. The idea is said to be spreading from coast to coast and local realtors are preparing for the not far distant day when the "co-op" will gain a foothold in Atlanta.

There is a large number of handsome apartments in this city, anyone of which it is believed would make a desirable home for their tenants, and it is not looked upon as a difficult thing to sell these elegantly appointed and conveniently placed dwellings to those who now occupy them.

ATLANTA ARCHITECTS PLAN BIG BUILDINGS

The extent to which Atlanta architects and contractors are participating in the great building program now being carried on throughout the south is again illustrated by the announcement of several additional plans now being drawn by G. Lloyd Preacher & Co., well-known Atlanta architects, which will be posted for bids in the near future.

Among these plans are those for a new hotel in Panama City, Fla., to be known as the Sherman. This structure will represent an investment of about $500,000, and will be built for the St. Andrews Bay Hotel company. It will be constructed in the popular Spanish vogue and will be built of reinforced concrete, stucco and tile. It will contain 100 rooms and many features, such as terraces, roof gardens and a large ballroom, all decorated in Spanish style.

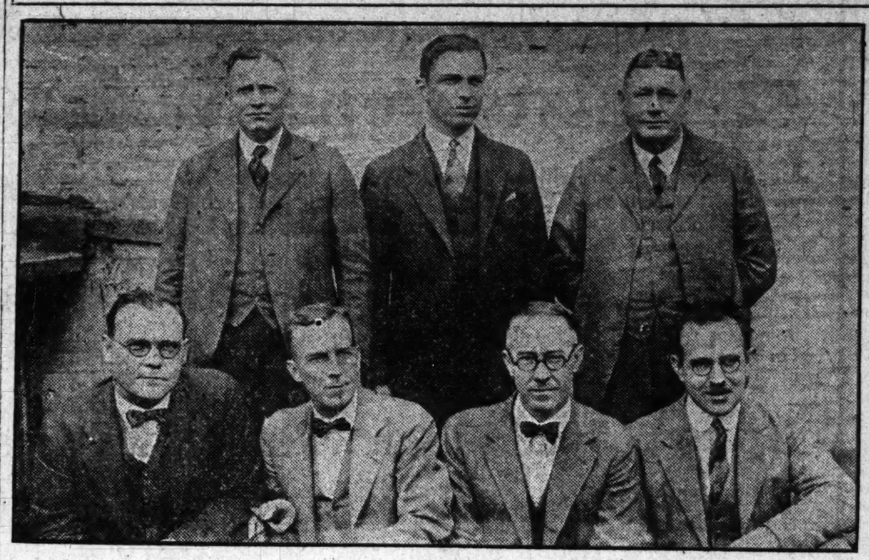

Because of the heavy investments by Atlantans in property in the vicinity of Panama City it is expected that construction of this hotel will be of great interest here.

Another hotel of similar type for which plans have been drawn by G. Lloyd Preacher & Co. is the Oaks hotel, at Bartow, which will cost about $300,000. This project has been let to the James S. Shaw company of Atlanta. The hotel will occupy the center of an entire block near two beautiful lakes, and will have several unusual features such as large roof gardens over a floor devoted to stores.

Plans are also being drawn by G. Lloyd Preacher & Co. for the Ct. Neots hotel, a $400,000 structure at Auburndale, Fla. This is to be another Spanish type structure, with spacious lounges, roof gardens and beautiful decorations in the Spanish mode. Contract probably will be let within 60 days.

Officials of the company announced Saturday that contract of the De La Howe Industrial school to be built for the state of South Carolina has been let to C. H. Van Ormer, with offices in the Healey building. Contract for the Christian Disciple church at Raleigh, N. C., another project from the offices of G. Lloyd Preacher & Co., was awarded to the J. E. Beeman Construction company.

WORK PROGRESSING ON ATHLETIC CLUB.

Work on the handsome new home of the Atlanta Athletic club is going forward with such strides that the splendid structure is beginning to take on the beautiful appearance it will present when complete. The concrete work has practically been completed and the modern brick veneering is being put on. The building will be a splendid addition to a rapidly-growing part of the city, and it will stand among a group of the finest buildings in the city.

Across Carnegie Way from the new club is being built the $6,000,000 department store of the Macey firm. The Henry Grady hotel, the fine new theater connected with the Macey store and that of the Henry Grady hotel will also add much to the beauty of the new Spring street section.

SPRING STREET GROWING IN POPULARITY.

The growing stream of traffic that flows all hours of the day and far into the night on Spring street, indicates the ever-increasing popularity of that thoroughfare, which, when connected with the improved portion of Madison, now in course of construction, will form one of the leading cross-town arteries.

NEW COACH LINE PROVES POPULAR.

The splendid new double-decked coaches placed in service by the Georgia Railway and Power company to serve Morningside and other residential sections that have no trolley lines are gaining popularity every day, according to announcements by the company. The best features of the coaches are their safety and comfort and they are also regarded as very handsome vehicles. In addition to an emergency brake and the regular foot-service brake, the big coaches are equipped with Westinghouse air brakes, insuring the safety of the passengers in emergencies.

WEST ANNOUNCES GOOD BUSINESS FOR OCTOBER.

H. F. West, Atlanta realtor, with offices in the Atlanta National bank building, gives out a statement in which he declares his business for the past month has been excellent. Mr. West announces the sale and exchange of several valuable properties. He says that the confidence of the money world in Atlanta is demonstrated by the fact that there is plenty of money for real estate loans offered here.

GEORGIA OYSTERS TO BE HARVESTED.

Georgia oyster beds, which are said to be stocked with unusually heavy crops of oysters because protective laws have been enforced, promise to give to the southern markets this year a most splendid supply of the bivalves, according to an interview printed in "The Week," bulletin of the Georgia utilities committee, by Tidewater Commissioner R. W. Clancey, of Darien.

The plentiful supply of oysters and other sea food this year, according to Mr. Clancey, is attributable to the laws that have been enforced protecting Georgia fisheries. A number of natural beds will be opened for the first time within a short while, from which many oysters are expected to be taken.

That the Georgia oyster has been proven entirely free from pollution and that it is attracting many large packing concerns to these markets, is another important statement made by Mr. Clancey with reference to the fisheries of Georgia. A meeting was recently held in Darien and St. Mary's for the purpose of discussing cooperation between packers and fisheries regarding development of this great enterprise. Millions will come into the state in exchange for sea food, it was stated.

CANDLER GARAGE TO BE MODERN.

Tentative plans for the proposed $600,000 multiple-story garage to be erected by Walter T. Candler at Houston and Ivy streets will give the latter thoroughfare two of the largest and most splendid automobile hotels in the country. The big structure, it is declared, is being worked out along the most modern lines and it is expected to have every feature approved as a result of experience with these new type structures. It is not known just when the building will begin, but it is expected that preparations will go forward at once for the foundations.

PALMER IMPROVING AFTER ILLNESS.

C. F. Palmer, head of the Palmer, Incorporated, who was ill for a time in Wesley Memorial hospital, is out of that institution and reported as regaining his health rapidly. Mr. Palmer heads the company that recently purchased the Glenn building, adding it to the Palmer building, at the corner of Marietta and Forsyth and 101 Marietta street, other important commercial structures on the street named.

Mr. Palmer has a wide circle of friends who will be pleased to know of his recovery.

OTIS RECEIVES SYMPATHY FROM FRIENDS.

R. R. Otis, member of the Atlanta real estate board and also widely-known business man, has received many espressions of sympathy because of the recently death of his mother, Mrs. James C. Otis, of Columbia, South Carolina.

JOEL HURT ILL AT HIS HOME.

Joel Hurt, Sr., developer and owner of valuable realty, is reported to be ill at his home. Mr. Hurt's condition is said not to be of a serious nature.

Joel Hurt, Sr., is looked upon as one of the builders of Atlanta, having done much to develop the transportation system of the city and to bring about several of the big residential sections of the city. He also is the builder of the Hurt building.

ATLANTA REALTORS TO FIGHT VICE.

A joint meeting of the Atlanta real estate board members and members of the local police force was held the past week, in which the subject of suppressing vice and crime in Atlanta was taken up for discussion and action. Several leading members of the board are said to have pledged themselves to aid the police and other civic organizations in cleaning up Atlanta. The statement has been made that business will follow the cleaning up of cities, and suppression of vice and crime in Atlanta is looked upon as a good business move in addition to the moral advantages that will obviously come with such a crusade.

ELEVATORS AGAIN RUNNING FULL TIME.

Restrictions placed upon local commercial buildings which caused curtailment of elevator and lighting service have been lifted by the power company, and buildings that suffered inconvenience because of the restricted power are again enjoying full elevator service. Building owners and managers are said to have cheerfully cooperated with the power company in its effort to conserve water during the recent drouth.

BUILDING TENANTS WARNED AGAINST FAKES.

The Atlanta Building Owners and Managers' association, through its executive secretary, Fred Schafer, have sent out warnings against fake peddlers and swindlers who are said to infest public office buildings at this season as Christmas approaches, peddlers multiply and in many instances persuade tenants to purchase worthless things and articles. They are regarded as nuisances by building managers who seek to protect patrons from them.

Berry Collins, president; Harry W. Ott, secretary, and J. H. Smith, sales manager of the Berry Collins company, spent last week in Florida, where the firm has about 78,000 acres of land near St. Andrews bay. The statement was given out by officers of the company that a splendid golf course has been completed on the property and that a crew of workmen will be taken from Atlanta at once to begin erection of a clubhouse and large hotel. The Berry Collins company maintains two offices at the Florida tract and has a large staff of salesmen who will begin within a short time a campaign of selling.

The Atlanta office of the Berry Collins company, which is in a building owned by Mr. Collins at 63 North Broad street will remain open despite the fact that the two Florida offices will begin activities within a short time. Mr. Collins has the greatest faith in the future of Atlanta and his holdings in this city are large and valuable. He is the owner of Blue Rock Heights, one of the handsomest subdivisions on the north side, and is the developer also of Shadow Lawn, a beautiful residential tract that has been almost completed and sold.

ALLEN GOES WITH BERRY COLLINS CO.

The announcement has been made that A. S. (Steve) Allen, who was with the Grant-Jeter company for several years, has joined the staff of the Berry Collins company. Mr. Allen is well known in real estate circles, having been connected with various concerns, and having had a wide experience. He has many friends who will doubtless be interested in the announcement of his new connection.

INTEREST IN COOPERATIVE APARTMENTS.

An article of much interest was printed in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post describing the cooperative apartment, which has taken such a firm hold upon home buyers in New York and other cities of the east. The cooperative apartment idea is much like that of the cooperative store, the benefits derived from it being based upon community of interests, extended purchasing power and reduced cost of service on account of the fact that various kinds of service can be performed to the residents by a group community servants than by individual ones.

Requests for information have been sent to the real estate review by people interested in the cooperative apartment and it is believed that the interest in this type of dwelling will increase in this city to the extent that such multiple units dwellings will be introduced here. Atlanta has more handsome apartments, perhaps, than any city its size in the country, and it is looked upon as practicable that some of the splendid dwellings should be sold to those who rents units in them and to others.

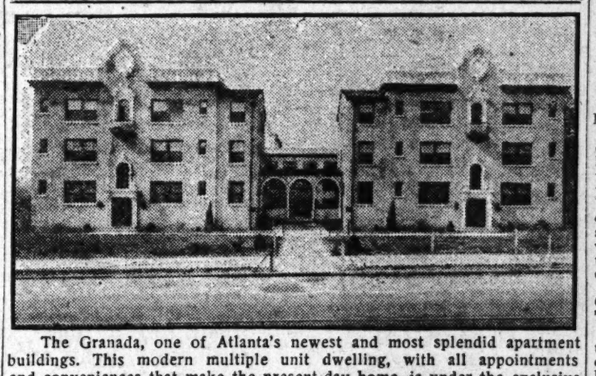

Rogers Realty Co. Adds New Salesmen To Its Large Staff

The L. W. Rogers Realty and Trust company, one of the best known real estate concerns in the city, has found its business reaching such a state of activity that additions have been made to its sales staff and preparations are being made to handle the greater activity promised for the future in Atlanta, according to J. S. Larramore, manager.

The sales staff of the Rogers company, consisting of a number of well known realty salesmen, was already a large one, and the addition of several new members will place the company in position to handle the large volume of business Mr. Larramore is looking forward to during the coming winter and spring.

"We are receiving many inquiries from Florida," said a member of the L. W. Rogers staff, "asking for information concerning Atlanta real estate, and numbers of transactions are being closed in which Florida people, or people from Florida, invest in Atlanta realty."

Handsome North Side Apartment

The Granada, one of Atlanta's newest and most splendid apartment buildings. This modern multiple unit dwelling, with all appointments and conveniences that make the present-day home, is under the exclusive management of Weyman & Connors, well-known real estate and rental concern of Atlanta.

Weyman & Connors Are Now Managing New Granada Apts.

The Granada apartments, now in the hands of Weyman & Connors, offer perhaps more for the money than many of the multiple dwellings of cheaper construction, according to John O. Childs, head of the rent department of the above company.

This building, erected of Nel-stone, a new and absolutely fireproof material, is appointed in the most luxurious manner, and the many conveniences provided by the management have made this building highly popular with the renting public.

The apartments are from one-room-and-kitchenette bachelor apartments to units of 2-3-4-5 rooms, the larger with two baths. The other appointments of the apartments are gas stoves, kitchen cabinets, refrigerators that are iced free and have the ice delivered from the outside. There also is a marble-top kitchen table and other kitchen conveniences. In the living rooms are Murphy in-a-door beds; the baths are tiled and have both tubs and showers.

In one of the basements of the building there is a 100-car garage, the management of which offers such service as cleaning cars and dusting them off, oiling and greasing them every 500 miles and washing them all under a monthly rate of cost. The garage being directly under the apartment makes it particularly convenient for the occupants. The garage is fireproof and heated with steam. Lockers and two laundries are in another basement.

The bachelor suites, with their miniature kitchenettes, are said to be particularly attractive, and many of these have been taken by unmarried men.

All apartments are provided with ice, heat, hot water, janitor service. The Granada is under the personal direction of F. K. Langston, resident manager, who insures service of the highest type at all times.

A. B. Cates To Speak To Realty Board Thursday Afternoon

A. B. Cates, vice chairman of the appraisal committee of the Atlanta Real Estate board and member of the firm of A. S. Adams-Cates company, will speak to members of the board Thursday at 4:30 p. m. on "Modern and Efficient Methods of Appraising Business Property." The speaker is said to be well qualified to talk on this subject as he has made a specialty for several years of handling and dealing in central business properties.

Forrest Adair, Jr., chairman of the appraisal committee, stated that the attendance at these lectures is increasing in a pleasing manner and members of the board report that they are receiving many helpful and constructive ideas with reference to the important subject of appraising real estate.

It is felt that what Mr. Cates will have to say on this subject will be especially interesting and beneficial to members of the board. The lecture will be the eighth of a series of nine, dealing with the correct appraisal of different phases of real estate in Atlanta. The ninth and concluding lecture will be given November 19.

George W. Ware Co. Makes Many Big Real Estate Deals

J. W. Rountree, of the George W. Ware company, pioneer business brokerage and real estate form of Atlanta, in giving out a highly optimistic statement regarding the business of his firm, of which he is the junior member, states that the outlook for the future is indicative of the most splendid business for this city. Mr. Rountree also states that W. J. Folsom, who is in charge of the business brokerage department, has induced W. C. Wiggins, who has had 17 years' experience in the business, to join the firm.

Business transactions and real estate sales are increasing daily, said Mr. Rountree, and the facilities of the concern, it is declared, are taxed to take care of the growing trade. A notable lease transaction recently made by this concern was of the Terminal hotel in Columbus, Ga., from J. D. Thomas to A. A. Langhorn and George W. Evans, who also own the Callahan hotel, in Bainbridge, Ga., and the Quincy hotel at Quincy, Fla. Mrs. Langhorn, it was stated, will take personal charge of the Terminal hotel. W. J. Folsom, who conducted the above transactions, also leased the Kennesaw hotel at Marietta, Ga., for Horowitz & Son came from New York J. E. Jaeckle to Fred McDonald. Sr. city and purchased the lease on the James cafe on North Pryor street, Atlanta. A filling station at Baker and Ivy streets was leased for Harvey Weatherby to G. C. Short, of North Carolina, and in addition to the above transactions there were many smaller ones, including groceries, boarding houses and filling stations, it was declared.

Many Transactions.

Mr. Rountree reports the following real estate sales during the past few days, indicating the growing activity of Atlanta realty:

For E. S. Hammond, Oklahoma City, Okla., to J. E. Eubanks, 16 acres, Clayton county, $1,500. From W. W. Reid to J. D. Turner, two lots on Palmetto avenue, $2,000. From Mrs. M. S. Hewitt to F. B. and Daisy Byrom, lot on Palmetto avenue, $750. From J. F. Prickette to Alex Vaughn, lot on Avon avenue, $1,250. From J. E. Eubanks to J. W. Fuller, tract near Mountain View, $1,650. From Mrs. Anna Robinson to James L. Key, 215 Bankhead highway, $5,000. From James L. Key to Jacob Chomsky, same, $5,500. From Mrs. H. O. Reese to Mr. Pfeffer, 12 houses on Linden street, $27,000. From Mrs. M. S. Hewitt and J. E. Eubanks to Mrs. L. J. Hanks, 309 Beckwith street, $4,000. From J. W. Creamer to Mrs. M. F. Merriam, 450 acres in Jeff Davis county, $3,500. From J. R. McClelland to C. J. Gardner, No. 368 Ormond street, $4,250. From C. J. Gardner to Mr. and Mrs. Pittard same property, $4,500.

Sales in contract stage process of closing aggregating $30,000.

GIRL BOBS HAIR, FATHER LOSES SUIT AGAINST BARBER

Dijon, France, November 7.—(AP)—An outraged parent who brought suit for damages against a barber for bobbing his daughter's hair got no sympathy from the court. His claim was rejected and he was condemned to pay the cost of the action.

The court held that haircutting was an act of every day life, that minors could not be expected to bring written authorization from their parents each time they sought the services of a barber, and that the barber could be proved at fault only if he acted against the clearly expressed wish of a parent.

The decision in this case nipped in the bud a whole crop of suits contemplated by parents against various barbers in this, the capital of Burgundy.

FOUR MEN ARE KILLED AS CAFE ROOF CRASHES

El Paso, Texas, November 7.—(AP) Four men were killed when the roof of the Tivoli cafe in Juarez, Mexico, across the Rio Grande from El Paso, crashed this afternoon. One American, A. L. Jones, and three Mexican workmen were crushed to death, and one other Mexican workman injured.

Morocco Rebels Continue To Shell Spanish Forces

Tetuan, Spanish Morocco, November 7.—(AP)—General Primo de Rivera, head of the military directorate in Spain, arrived here last evening.

Preparations are proceeding for the proclamation next Monday of a new khalifa (supreme Moorish authority) in the Spanish zone. Muley el Hassan, a boy of 15 years, is to be inaugurated. The celebration of the event will last for three days.

The big rebel gun situated on the heights of Mokkedsan continues to bombard Tetuan but the damage is slight. The weather is good and there is much activity on both sides of the fighting line. Representatives of the Spanish forces and Djebala tribesmen met for four days in the Kitsan Garden in a discussion over the withdrawal by the tribesmen of the Mokkedsan gun. Apparently the price demanded by the tribesmen was too high, as the negotiations were broken off Monday afternoon.

On Tuesday morning the tribesmen attacked Ben Karrish from the southwest but retired after several casualties had been inflicted by both sides in the fighting. Strong enemy concentrations were observed at Opacien.

The Spanish air force yesterday dropped 300 high explosive shells and incendiary bombs on tribal villages and concentration near Darraed.

A section of the foreign legion which arrived from Dar Liffien proceeded immediately to Ben Karrish.

LIVING COSTS SEEN AS FORCE TO MAKE WIVES GO TO WORK

Milwaukee, Wis., November 7.—(AP) Within a half century, every able-bodied woman will be at work, helping her husband to make a living for the family.

Economic pressure on the men of the household will make it necessary for wives to enter employment, and it will take the combined efforts of all to "make both ends meet." And electricity will be "house maids" of the future.

These are some of the observations of Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, suffragette leader, who is in Milwaukee to address the convention of school teachers.

Looking into the future, Mrs. Catt declared that the cost of living and the standards of living will continue to go up and, because of these facts, she believes that the clinging vine type of woman will pass out of the picture during the next 50 years.

DENSE FOG BRINGS GRIEF TO THREE OCEAN STEAMERS

Norfolk, Va., November 7.—(AP)—A dense fog, which hung over Hampton Roads and the lower Chesapeake bay last night and this morning, brought grief to three ships, but little material damage to any.

The Norwegian steamer Fram, bound to Newport News, from New York in ballast, stuck her nose in the sand at the outer edge of Cape Henry, remaining there six hours. She was floated by the coast guard cutter Mascoutin, and proceeded to Newport News apparently undamaged.

The American steamer Sewells Point, the Italian steamer Giovanni, both coal laden, sideswiped each other while making their way through Hampton Roads. The Sewells Point was bound for Providence, and the Giovanni for Genoa. Neither vessel was badly damaged and proceeded to sea after being examined.

BRITISH PUZZLED BY MARITAL MOVES OF U. S. HEIRESS

London, November 7.—The British are having quite as much of a time keeping track of Mary Landon Baker's marital threats as people used to in America.

The Daily Graphic announced two days ago that the Chicago heiress was betrothed to Captain Ralph Peto, of the British diplomatic service.

The Daily Sketch now denies the engagement "on the authority of a friend."

Atlanta Realty To Be More Active Declares H. F. West

Indicating the increasing activity of the Atlanta real estate market, H. F. West, well-known Atlanta realtor, with offices in the Atlanta National Bank building, has given out a list of real estate transactions of interest and importance.

Mr. West has had wide experience in the realty field in Atlanta, and is looked upon as one of the livest dealers in the city. The list follows:

Seventy-eight North avenue, just off Peachtree street and near the new Shrine building, a two-story residence for Messrs. Bell and Kidd, of Milledgeville, Ga.

Forty-seven Oak avenue, frame bungalow for Mrs. Belle Brandhorst to the Real Estate Trust company.

Thirty-seven and 39 North Boulevard, a frame duplex to Miller S. Bell.

House and lot in Oakland City to George E. Campbell.

Business property at 268 Decatur street to Messrs. Bell and Kidd.

Two lots on Campbellton road to L. T. Hall.

House and lot in East Point to P. N. Ingram.

Vacant lot on Beckwith street to A. D. Dalton.

MOVIE WARFARE OVER TAX LAW COMES TO CLOSE

Hartford, Conn., November 7.—(AP) The warfare between motion picture interests and the state of Connecticut over the new tax has ended with an armistice agreed upon at Governor Trumbull's office. The motion picture exchanges will be resumed and the appeal to the supreme court of the United States to have the law declared unconstitutional will be abandoned.

The governor declared that he will exercise the influence of his office to bring about a modification of the law in the 1926 session of the legislature including the elimination of the censorship feature.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL RUNS AWAY TO LEAD OWN LIFE

New York, November 7.—Wearied of life as a "poor little rich girl," Mary McTiernan has run away.

Daughter of a wealthy and socially prominent New York physician, Mary, who is 17, overhead her father discussing plans to send her to an exclusive private school. Something inside Mary welled up in rebellion against the surfeit of wealth with which she has been surrounded since birth.

"I want to live my own life, daddy," she wrote in a farewell note, which Dr. James R. McTiernan found upon his return to his Park avenue home from a hunting trip, Mary had gone.

RAILWAY DONATES KENTUCKY LAND TO PARK BOARD

Frankfort, Ky., November 7.—(AP) The Louisville & Nashville railroad today presented Dr. Willard Rouse Julson, chairman of the Kentucky park commission, with a deed to 137 acres of land at Natural Bridge, Ky., in Powell county near the Wolfe county line in central Kentucky.

NEGRO SCHOOL TEACHER GIVEN PRISON TERM

Hattiesburg, Miss., November 7.—(AP)—Five years in the state penitentiary was the sentence given Francis Talley, a negro school teacher of this city by Judge Robert Hall in circuit court here on a charge of obtaining and selling public school licenses that were stolen from the office of the state superintendent of education.

In passing sentence Judge Hall stated that he was imposing the maximum sentence because the offense was a nefarious one.

KIRKWOOD CITIZENS WILL HOLD RALLY THURSDAY NIGHT

A rally of Kirkwood merchants and civic leaders will be held next Thursday night, it was announced Saturday. Mayor Walter A. Sims will be principal speaker and a number of other prominent speakers will give addresses, it is announced.

The meeting will be held on Boulevard DeKalb in front of a group of stores in South Kirkwood and a program of music and other entertainment is planned. One of the features will be talks on the progress made by Kirkwood since its consolidation with Atlanta.

CAROLINA OFFICERS FREED FROM BLAME IN KILLING MAN

Chester, S. C., November 7.—(AP)—A coroner's jury today exonerated four Chester officers of blame in connection with the death of Sid Clyburn, of Rock Hill, who was shot to death near Lando, 12 miles from here, early this morning when he refused to obey a command to halt. After the inquest, the jury returned a verdict that Clyburn came to his death from wounds inflicted "by officers in performance of their sworn duty."

Hampton Montgomery and Lillie Hoyle, both said to be from the vicinity of Rock Hill, who were companions of Clyburn, testified at the inquest, and are now held in jail, pending furnishing of $200 bonds, on charges of transporting liquor.

The two said they were picked up by Clyburn in Columbia late yesterday and not until they were well on their way to Rock Hill did they know that the automobile had a cargo of whisky, they said. "Ninety-eight half-gallon jars of whisky were found in the car," it was testified at the inquest.

DOLLY SISTERS FROWN ON PLAYING SECONDARY PARTS

Paris, November 7.—Mlle. Mistinguette, who always boasted that her two legs were prettier than all four legs of America's Dolly sisters, apparently is one up on the Dolly girls, but the latter are after her in the courts.

Bad feeling has long existed between Mistinguette, possessor of the original "million dollar legs," and the shapely sisters, who are favorites in the most expensive pleasure resorts of the continent. Much of this jealousy concerned such things as dressing room accommodations and the size of billboard types and electric signs.

Now the Dolly Sisters have brought suit against the Moulin Rouge theater for 550,000 francs, which is about $22,000 in American money, claiming that they signed a contract last year to star in a new winter revue, later to find themselves displaced on the program by Mistinguette, who manages the theater and directs the staging of the revue.

SOUTHERN FIRM PLANS PURCHASE OF GAS PROPERTIES

New York, November 7.—(AP)—Southern Gas and Power corporation is completing negotiations for the purchase of important gas properties in New York state, Pennsylvania and Maryland. It now controls gas companies in Georgia, West Virginia, North Carolina and in Alabama.

New financing will be done in connection with these purchases. It is expected additional issues of class A stock and convertible notes will be offered in New York within the next few weeks.

Princess Galatzino Sails For France Without Husband

New York, November 7.—(AP)—Princess Natislaz Galatzino, formerly Aimee Crocker Gouraud, recently married to young Prince Galatzino in Paris, sailed today on the French liner without her husband. He will remain in New York.

The princess said: "You can say for me that I'm sailing for Paris and sailing alone. There is not any more."

The prince arrived 30 minutes before the ship sailed to bid his wife goodbye.

WARE COUNTY LIONS AID EDUCATION WEEK

Following suggestions of State Superintendent of Schools Fort E. Land, the Waycross Lions' club is planning a motorcade to visit every consolidated and one-room school in Ware county during American Education week, November 16 to 22.

A special committee of the club is arranging details for the motorcade, which will be charged with the duty of making a survey of school conditions in the county. This survey will be reported to the club and the needs of the schools and suggestions for improvement will then be sent to the proper authorities.

Waycross and Ware county are both making elaborate plans for proper observance of American Education week.

The Georgia Normal school at Statesboro, through the state school department, gave out its tentative program Saturday for observance of the week.

GOVERNMENT SUES W. G. M'ADOO, JR., FOR INCOME TAX

Los Angeles, November 7.—(AP)—The name of William G. McAdoo, Jr., son of the former secretray of the treasury, was among those against whom income tax liens were filed yesterday by Income Tax Collector R. B. Goodcell. The government claims there is $58.93 due on young McAdoo's 1924 tax.

Through an error, the name of the elder McAdoo was at first associated with the tax lien but a recheck developed that it was the son against whom the lien was directed.

Red Men Assemble For Annual Session On Next Thursday

Officials of the Atlanta district, Improved Order of Red Men, announced Saturday that the annual convention of the school of instruction of that organization will be in session here Saturday, November 21. The session will open at 3 o'clock in the afternoon with public exercises. R. C. McCall, great senior sagamore, will preside. City Attorney James L. Mayson will be the principal speaker on the program.

The business session will be given over to reports and election of officers. Present officers are: Baxter P. Coker, district sachem; Ben L. Askew, district senior sagamore; Walter W. Hollis, district junior sagamore; John C. Cook, prophet; Fletcher W. Laird, district chief of records; D. R. Hubbard, district guard of wigwam, and W. R. Bell, captain.

The session will close with an oposum supper and musical entertainment. Entertainment will be furnished by Powhatan tribe No. 8, under the direction of J. H. Brown. About 500 delegates are expected for the session.

FARM BUREAU MOVES TO KILL MISTLETOE

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—If the department of agriculture has its way kissing opportunities under the Christmas mistletoe will be abolished.

The department doesn't object to the kissing; but to the mistletoe, which is regarded as a dangerous forest pest. A drive has been started against mistletoe in the national forests and within 10 years the department hopes to exterminate the plant.

WGST WILL OFFER RADIO FEATURES DURING THIS WEEK

A program of Spanish music will feature the broadcast Monday night at Georgia Tech from WGST, powerful Tech radio station. The Monday night programs have been designated as "Tech Nites" and regular programs will be offered.

Professor J. A. Campaoamor, of the romance language department, will sponsor the program, assisted by Miss Clare Harden, pianist, and Mrs. Mark K. Jerome, guitarist and soprano. The broadcast will begin at 9 o'clock and conclude at 10 o'clock.

The Tech station formerly operated at WGM, The Constitution's "Old Reliable" station. It was among the first radio stations in the country, and until the apparatus was given to Tech by Clark Howell, editor of The Constitution, was a nightly radio feature for thousands of fans.

Thursday night's program will be sponsored by Miss Frances Woodberry, soprano soloist of All Saints' Episcopal church.

BUSINESS LICENSE RECEIPTS REVEAL GAINS OVER 1924

Receipts of the city clerk's office of Atlanta for the first ten months of the year exceed the receipts for the corresponding months last year by $23,000, according to information made public Saturday by Walter C. Taylor, city clerk. This money was received in payment of business licenses and indicates the number of business firms in Atlanta has increased considerably over last year.

Receipts for the first ten months are approximately $6,000 less than were received during the entire twelve months of last year.

JUDGE SESSIONS GIVES DINNER TO DIRECTORS

Marietta, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—Judge Moultrie M. Sessions, president of the Sessions Loan and Trust company, tendered a dinner to three newly elected directors of the company at his home here last night. The dinner was attended by members of the firm and other guests.

The new directors announced are R. H. Alderman and L. N. Pipkin, of Lakeland, Fla., and Congressman Herbert J. Drane, of Florida, who were present at the dinner.

After the dinner quite a number of talks were made and an optimistic report of the affairs of the concern was given.

The comapny was most pleasingly entertained by a group of old southern melodies by Miss Sarah Patton and some beautiful songs by Mrs. R. H. Alderman.

TWO MONTHS' TERM GIVEN M. A. HARMON

Entering a plea of guilty, M. H. Harmon Saturday was sentenced in federal court to two months in prison on a charge of violating the national prohibition act. He was released under $200 bond until November 17, when he is to begin serving the sentence.

Engineer McGee Held Responsible For A.C.L. Wreck

Washington, November 7.—(AP)—Responsibility for the Atlantic Coast Line passenger train wreck near Newark, Ga., on September 27, in which five persons were killed and 58 injured, was ascribed today by interstate commerce commission inspectors to the crew of Train No. 180, and primarily to Engineer McGee, who was instantly killed.

A report of the investigation of the accident was made to the commission, and in it the inspectors took occasion to rebuke generally engineers with negro firemen, who fail to pass train orders to their firemen for reading, as an additional precaution against accidents.

"This accident was caused by the failure of the crew of Train No. 180 to obey a meet order," the report said, after explaining that the wreck was caused by collision, "for which Engineer McGee, Conductor Tomberlin and Baggagemaster Wilkins are responsible. Conductor Tomberlin and Baggagemaster Wilkins were so engrossed in their work that neither of them knew when their train passed the meeting point. . . .

"This accident calls attention to the practice which exists with some enginemen, where they have colored firemen, of not showing such firemen the orders which they have received, or making them acquainted with the contents of such orders. In the case under discussion, it is possible that the accident would not have occurred had the fireman been in possession of information which the rules required be furnished to him.

Classified "Current Events"

It would take you a good many months and a good many yards of mileage and steamship tickets to visit all the scenes and happenings presented in fifteen minutes of the "weekly news" at the moving picture theater.

But this interesting digest of them gives you a glimpse at what is going on all over the world.

And, by the same token, it would take all of your time and energy for weeks personally to find all the buying and selling opportunities put before you in the A-B-C Classified Section.

But this time and money saving catalogue of opportunities puts all the news of possible profit and satisfaction in your hands every day.

The "A-B-C" and "1-2-3" arrangement of the Classifications and the individual ads makes it easy for you to go straight to the offers that interest you.

POULTRY
PAN-A-CE-A
Puts hens in laying trim

You can feed as you will, care for as you may, but until your flock is in trim to lay, eggs will be scarce.

Just add Poultry Pan-a-ce-a to the mash: mix one pound of Pan-a-ce-a with every 50 pounds of mash or one tablespoonful to every 20 hens once a day.

Then watch the change come over your flock, see the combs and wattles begin to turn red. Listen to the song, scratch and cackle.

That's a sign of getting ready for business.

Remember, you buy Pan-a-ce-a like this: for 100 hens, the 12-pound package; 60 hens, the 5-pound package; 200 hens, the 25-pound pail; 500 hens, the 100-pound drum.

You feed that package, all of it, on the more-eggs-or-no-pay way.

For Lice—Use Dr. Hess Louse Killer.
For Roup—Use Dr. Hess Roup Tablets.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR REMOVED

PERMANENTLY, PAINLESSLY AND HARMLESSLY By the ONLY method known to Medical Science and leaving the skin soft and smooth.

REASONS: Electrolysis is too uncertain, tedious and painful. X-Ray (as discovered originally by Rontgen) has now been completely abandoned as too dangerous on account of its many and varied wave lengths.

Professor Albert C. Geyser, formerly of Fordham and Cornell Universities, devised a method that is at once safe, sure and permanent. With this method only the shortest wave lengths are selected by means of a magnetic wave selector.

A life-time money-back guarantee to every patient.

SPRING STREET ACREAGE—It is unusual to offer for sale acreage on a thoroughfare like Spring Street. We have about 5 acres out at the far end of the street near the intersection of Peachtree. This is a choice residential section; the lot we offer has 300 feet frontage and running back about 750 feet. It is worth buying to keep awhile. Price $25,000.
WILLIAMS STREET—We have 80 feet frontage in the first block of Williams Street. This is the next street in line for improvement. It should be straightened out, regraded, paved, just as Spring Street was treated, buy before improvements are completed; price $400 a front foot. A two-story dwelling pays carrying charges.
WEST NORTH AVENUE—A large corner lot, vicinity of Spring Street. This is a good locality. Many investors have faith in it. This property is near Georgia Tech holdings. It is good enough right now for a store or refreshment stand. Large, two-story frame dwelling bringing in a fair rental income. Price $12,500.
WEST PEACHTREE STREET—In the vicinity of Fourteenth Street; 50 feet frontage. At $180 a foot this property is lower than other owners will accept. There is an undoubted possibility to gain on West Peachtree near Fourteenth Street. A business section will develop at that point.
SPRING STREET—A large corner lot in the very best portion of this prominent thoroughfare, 10x150. This corner is good enough for an office building right now, it will get better and better. It is an excellent location for some special structure. Price quoted on personal application.
SPRING STREET CORNER—We have the only corner between the central part of the city and North Avenue offered at less than $500 a front foot. It is undoubtedly a good purchase, worth buying and holding.
WEST CAIN STREET—Lot is 50x190, with a two-story building. Leads to a good business concern. We are offering this place at a little more than ground value, but the rental income pays around 8%. One of the best investments in the promising northwest portion of Atlanta.

JUST PLAIN HONEST

There was a time when we envied the fellow who was commonly referred to as a "shrewd" trader. But we have changed our minds. It is a compliment we no longer cherish. There has been entirely too much "shrewdness" in the used car business. We prefer to be known as just plain, HONEST.

DAYLIGHT ROBBERY OF HOME REPORTED

A daring daylight burglary in a fashionable residential section, the robbery of two negroes at the point of a gun Saturday night and two other small robberies were reported to police Saturday night.

Thieves entered the home of R. H. Martin, of 1448 Peachtree road, Saturday afternoon, and escaped with jewelry and clothing valued at $1.500. No clues as to their identity were found.

Holdup Is Reported.

Charley Young, of 36 Fitzgerald street, and Tom Marion, of 108 East Cain street, both negroes, were held up at the point of pistols by two negro gunmen Saturday night near police station and robbed of a total of $11.85 and the automobile in which they were riding.

A good description was furnished the police and a net has been spread for their arrest. The two were held up on the Washington street viaduct, just over Decatur street, they told police.

Pocket Is Picked.

E. P. Freeman, of Midtown inn, Pryor street, reported to police Saturday night that he had been robbed of $45 in money by a pickpocket while riding a Highland avenue street car. He said that he suspected a well dressed young man who crowded him on the car. He did not miss the money until the young man had left the car at Houston and Ivy streets, he told police. The robbery was reported to Patrolman W. E. Chatham.

Mrs. N. E. Morris, of 377 Pulliam street, asked police to search for her negro washerwoman who, she said, had stolen several of her dresses. The woman brought the laundry to the home Saturday night and several pieces were missing. She called the negro's attention to the error and she grabbed several other pieces of clothing and fled, Mrs. Morris told police.

North Avenue Church Opens Bible Conference Tonight

One of the cartoons drawn by Dr. E. J. Rice, returned missionary from the Philippine Islands, who will begin a revival series at the North Avenue Presbyterian church tonight. Dr. Rice illustrates his lectures with slides and cartoons, many of which he draws himself.

A week's Bible conference will begin tonight at North Avenue Presbyterian church with Dr. E. J. Rice, returned missionary from the Philippine Islands, conducting the conference. Dr. Rice is widely known throughout the country as a Bible conference teacher.

He also is cartoonist for the Sunday School Times, a publication for the Presbyterian Sunday school. All of Dr. Rice's lectures will be illustrated with slides and cartoons, many of them drawn by himself.

One of his feature lectures will be delivered at the opening service tonight. The subject, "The Law of the Octave," is one of much interest. The lecture will be continued at the Monday night meeting.

The lecture is illustrated with pictures of snow drops which are always in the shape of the octave with no two alike. Dr. Rice tells of the law of the octave which he says is carried out in all laws of nature including religion.

The meetings will open at 8 o'clock every night through Friday night. The North Avenue Presbyterian choir will furnish special music at each service.

The list of subjects announced for the meetings after Monday night are: Tuesday night, "Freed From the Power of Sin"; Wednesday night, "Freed From the Penalty of Sin"; Thursday night, "Freed From the Presence of Sin," and Friday night, "The Meaning and Menace of Modernism." Dr. Rice will go from here to Florida to conduct another Bible conference.

MID-WEST SWEPT BY RAIN AND SNOW

Chicago, November 7.—(AP)—Rain or snow swept across football fields from the nation's capital to the western plains today and turned gridirons into sloughs that disheartened even the most valiant eleven.

Players staggered and sloshed through pools of water and gumbo that in places was six inches deep and so sticky that few could get away for anything that resembled a long run. Fumbles were frequent and in many cases meant defeat. Officials were likewise affected, one being forced from action.

Nor were the spectators much better off. They shivered in the blizzards and gales and huddled under oil cloth and slicker from heavy downpours that, at some games, continued through most of the play. Women who came in beautiful clothes trooped droopingly from the stadiums in ooze.

And yet, all these things are just a prologue to what is coming in the next 24 hours in this section, the weather bureau announced. A storm, brewing in the Ozarks of Missouri, swept northward and was due to reach the Great Lakes district during the night, bringing snow and wind. Then was to come a cold wave, plunging the mercury down to 20 degrees above zero. This disturbance is due to sweep as far east as the Appalachian region.

Kansas City, November 7.—(AP)—Late trains, impeded traffic and snow from several inches to drifts several feet deep were the results tonight from one of the worst early November snow storms in history that was general over Kansas and part of Missouri today.

All trains from the west were marked up from one to two hours late at Union Station here tonight, and most trains in Kansas were late up to several hours.

The swirling, blinding snow, driven before a sharp north wind, which began to fall in western Kansas before daylight, tonight had piled drifts several feet deep and made motor traffic almost impossible in some sections. The snow at Tribune, Kans., threatens to tie up train traffic.

Heavy rains preceded the snow in Kansas and rain was general over the southwest, measuring from one to two inches in Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri.

565 ARE ARRESTED IN TRAFFIC CASES

With 565 cases against traffic violators during the month of October, police have renewed their activities in November in a war on reckless drivers, speeders and drunken drivers. There were 310 arrests for reckless driving made during the past month, 156 arrests for speeders and 99 cases made against traffic ordinance violators, it was announced Saturday night.

The total number of arrests for the month was 2,578 which netted the city $35,739.50 in fines. Of this number there were 2,378 city cases and 198 state cases. There were 263 cases dismissed and 203 bound over to the state court.

There were 1,116 white men arrested during the month, 127 white women, 976 negro men and 359 negro women, according to figures compiled Saturday night.

PLAN TO STOP TRAIN MEETS OPPOSITION

Cleveland, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—The mass meeting held in the court house here Friday afternoon, opposing a petition of John D. Patterson, receiver for the Gainesville and Northeastern railroad to the public service commission asking discontinuance of passenger and mail service over this road from Gainesville to Helen, was attended by a large representative body of citizens from Brookton, Clermont, Cleveland, Nacoochee, Helen and Robertstown.

Much interest was manifested in the continuance of the passenger service and a most indomnitable determination to wage an effective and strenuous fight before the public service commission was evident by all present.

J. H. Telford, Charles W. White, J. R. Lumsden, Thomas F. Underwood, M. J. Williams and Congressman Bell spoke forcefully on the petion and insisted that under proper business management the passenger and mail service could be made to yield the stockholders of the road splendid dividends.

Congressman Bell told of the many months he labored with the postoffice department that they might reward this railroad an increased compensation for carrying this mail, and that he was successful in his endeavor.

D. T. Quillian, of Brookton, prominent business man of Hall county, was elected chairman; J. P. Davidson, of Cleveland, secretary, and G. H. Boyd, of Morse Brothers Lumber Co., of Helen, assistant secretary.

Colonel O. J. Lilly, of Gainesville, was employed to represent the patronage of this railroad before the public service commission on November 12 at 10 o'clock.

Chairman Quillian appointed Thomas F. Underwood, J. H. Telford and C. W. White to draft a resolution expressing the people's willingness to fully cooperate with the railroad in obtaining passenger and freight service.

The up-to-date farmer does not want a weekly newspaper—
He wants the news of the world delivered by carrier into his home every-other-day.
¶ The Tri-Weekly Constitution really takes the place of a daily paper in over 100,000 up-to-date southern farm homes.
¶ These farmers pay for this paper at the full subscription price, and they pay for it in advance.
¶ The Tri-Weekly Constitution represents a publication which has advised with representative farmers of the southeast for over a half century.
¶ These farmers are now rapidly coming into their own, and The Tri-Weekly Constitution is a great advertising medium for reaching them. The farm trade of the southeast is well worth going after.

EDUCATION MOVEMENT.

According to news releases the Georgia Citizens' Education Movement is being reorganized with a state committee of 500 prominent business and professional men, with every county represented. It is sending out its first bulletin, explaining the purposes of the movement and appealing to thinking business men to write to Governor Walker their individual convictions on the advisability or not of calling an extra session of the legislature, and their ideas of what should be included in the call if issued.

The bulletin does not commit the movement for or against an extra session, but admonishes citizens to become more articulate on this and all public questions.

As to the purposes of this organized effort, the bulletin in question outlines them briefly as follows:

"The movement will seek in every way to cooperate with the educational forces; to bring to their aid the strong backing of informed business and professional leaders. The state committee will look to the state board of education, the state superintendent of schools, the board of directors of the Georgia Educational association, the trustees of the university system, the acting chancellor and the presidents of the various state schools and colleges for guidance and direction in formulating the state program and will depend upon them to assist in carrying it out. The same relationship will exist between the local committee and the local board and superintendent of schools."

There are no greater issues before the people of Georgia than the provision for a permanent highway construction system on a state-wide plan that will eliminate the necessity for the present checker-board system; and the provision for school expansions, coordination, and proposed institutional maintenances. In this connection the economic wastes now experienced through the discounting of common school warrants must be stopped.

As The Constitution has emphasized before, however, to convene the same legislature that refused to give heed to either of these issues less than four months ago, without first knowing whether or not any constructive results might ensue, would be a further waste of public funds, when the state is not in position to pay its outstanding pension obligations, and therefore assuredly not in position to waste anything.

There are many things that need attention. They needed attention when the legislature was in regular session. They are more imperative now by reason of some of the bungling methods of the legislature. But it must not be overlooked that the legislature that it is proposed to reconvene is the same body, with two chairs vacant, that turned a deaf ear to either state-wide road development, or to school equalization, or to institutional expansion to meet the present-day demands.

As to the pension matter, the public is quite familiar with the way it bungled it.

There is no sentiment in Georgia to tolerate any clap-trap political maneuvering under the pretext of discussing state-wide legislation.

The citizens' movement to arouse public thought to the great educational demands of Georgia is a good one. Many of the leading citizens of the state are enlisted in the work. It will serve a good purpose if it arouses citizens to speak for education in their own name.

THE TECH-GEORGIA GAME.

The Macon Telegraph calls attention to "ominous rumors" that the football game between the University and Tech on November 14th will be attended with a "free-for-all fisticuff between the students of the two institutions."

It offers some "friendly advice" in anticipation of such a possibility. All of which is good enough, but suggestions of the kind are not the outgrowth of anything that has been said or done by any person, student or others, connected with either institution.

Our prediction is it will be not only the largest in attendance, but the best enjoyed and most manly played of any game in the history of inter-collegiate athletics in the south.

The great triumph of college sport has been due to the manliness displayed by opposing teams on the fields—the spirit of intense college loyalty that has always been tempered with college gentlemanness.

Innocent enthusiasm, intensified by the ardor of youth, has too often been mistaken for hoodlumism.

Our prediction is the approaching game will be free from any unpleasant features.

When basketball between the University and Tech was resumed a little more than a year ago the same predictions of rowdyism were made. The game was hotly contested, but entirely manly, and the aftermath was a love feast.

The same spirit will no doubt control in the forthcoming football game. It is up to the student body of both institutions to see that it does. Anything else would be a disgrace to both institutions.

TAMMANY'S CHIEF.

The remarkable victory of Tammany in New York, following one of the most deliberate attempts known to American politics to organize a rebellion within its own ranks focusses attention again upon that organization, and upon the quiet, unassuming man who directs it—George W. Olvany.

He is not as spectacular as was the late Richard Croker, nor so commanding. He inspires loyalty more by personal love than by the party lash.

He is not so domineering as was the late Charles F. Murphy, and infinitely less fond of the lime-light than the "big boss" who preceded him.

Orderly, methodical, persuasive, he perfected the organization not only in every ward, but in every block; and with a smile of approval of the work of his lieutenants, a friendly slap on the back, a warning against any of the political vices to which overwrought enthusiasts sometimes succumb, he secured the devoted cooperation of his workers on a different basis from that seen before in Tammany battles.

There never was a more orderly election, although one of the most warmly contested in modern times, and there never was an election that illustrated greater organization efficiency or a more complete routing of the insurrection forces.

Tammany, before the battle, had been brought under well-disciplined obedience to strong and effective leadership. Even from Queen's and from King's, the two strongholds of the revolutionists, the very leaders of the rebels were found working loyally for the straight ticket of regulars—a marked tribute to a leader before untried in so great an undertaking.

The primacy of Olvany was established before the day of the election, and the result—particularly the cooperative manner in which it was brought about—made him an outstanding figure in the affairs of the democratic party.

In the meantime the level and the tone of New York city elections have been lifted.

THE ONLY ALTERNATIVE.

The letter from Rev. W. H. Faust on this page calls attention to a traffic situation that is becoming more serious. And any additional serious traffic situation in Atlanta, added to the many other serious traffic situations that confront us at all times apparently, only serves to make the safety problem more difficult to solve, and the hazards of the streets more acute. Dr. Faust calls attention to the flagrant violations of the signal lights at the down-town intersections. These violations have heretofore been almost entirely confined to pedestrians, and are inexcusable and tend to break down respect for law, and law itself, but within the past few days vehicular violations have been reported. In the latter case the accident menace becomes enormously increased.

That violations even of traffic lights is a disrespect for law that may lead to other and more serious violations there is no mistake. Even crime usually begins in a small way and grows into the criminal by a process of graduated development. It is no doubt true that carelessness rather than criminality is responsible for most of the violations of the light signals, and yet too much is at stake to permit these violations to continue. Defiance of law is always dangerous, and in the matter of traffic regulations it simply breaks down the whole system, and brings chaos rather than order out of a system of traffic laws that could and would solve the accident problem as much as humanly possible if rigidly adhered to.

If the violations continue there is only one thing to do, and the public will heartily sustain it. That is to arrest every violator and carry him or her before the recorder's court.

Ordinances are laws and they are made to be enforced. The traffic lights will serve a good purpose if the regulations regarding them are adhered to by all pedestrians and vehicle drivers. Otherwise it would be better that they were junked.

For many days the chief of police kept a traffic officer at each signal-light intersection. The mayor ordered those at the less confested intersections assigned to other duties. He was right and The Constitution approved his action. It should not be necessary to have the lights and traffic officials employed in doing what the lights alone should do. They are intended as conservators of man power in law enforcement. But they cannot thus serve unless the people show the right spirit of cooperation.

In this connection we unhesitatingly make this observation—that it is not reasonable to expect to control traffic at an intersection several blocks from Five Points on a basis of the time required to clear traffic at Five Points.

Some readjustments will be necessary in this respect. In the meantime, however, the safety of Atlanta's streets is an economic as well as a human problem. The city authorities, the Atlanta Safety Council, and most of the citizens are trying to solve these problems. Full cooperation is necessary.

Failing to receive this cooperation, then, the situation demands that penalties be imposed on violators. That is the only alternative.

WILLIS J. ABBOT.

Willis J. Abbot, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, of Boston—one of the most unique and most remarkable daily newspapers in this country—is visiting Atlanta, and will remain in Georgia for several days. He is not only a national figure in journalism, with perhaps as wide an editorial experience as any American of his day, but he is an outstanding author, especially of books touching controversial problems in our national life. His story of "Our Navy for Young Americans," history of "Notable Women," story of "The United States in the World War," of "America's Merchant Marine" and many others—all definitely place him as one of the nation's best known and most popular confemporary historians.

With it all he is a man of charming personality, a good talker, and a most enterprising and useful American citizen.

A cordial welcome is assured him on his visit to the native state of his mother.

The Christian Science Monitor, noted for its conservatism, veracity and learned editorship, will shortly issue a Georgia Supplement, in which practically every economic, agricultural, civic, educational and cultural interest will be intelligently discussed by Georgians. It is a compliment to the state that this great newspaper of the east should devote an edition to Georgia, and to the things that attract investments and settlers. It illustrates a broad, commendable spirit, and one that deserves and will receive the hearty appreciation of every Georgian.

THE COMMUNITY CHEST.

The budget for the Community Chest for 1926, already completed, amounts to only $666,000, or approximately $148,000 less than required for 1925. This has been brought about by cutting out of the chest for next year five agencies that are being supported at present, and by finding ways and means for some of the other agencies to continue their services with no lessening of efficiency but with savings through greater economies. The amount to be asked for this year, therefore, is as low as it is possible to prune the whole, and it carries every dollar, except the nominal expense of group administration, to the great relief, charity and welfare work of 39 different activities.

There can be no sound argument advanced against the community group method of administering relief and welfare work. These agencies must be maintained. The obligation is one that the citizens cannot escape, nor do the right-thinking citizens want to escape it. Every city has the problem of taking care of its charities, its uplift, health-conserving, safety, Red Cross, social welfare, Boy and Girl Scouts, and various other appealing causes and services that demand the unselfish, big-hearted interest of every one. The problem is no bigger in Atlanta than in any other city its size—perhaps not as big. To ignore or show indifference to this problem is to show Atlanta to be neglectful of her own material, social, educational, cultural and health interests.

This obligation of a city being manifest experience has demonstrated the wisdom of the administration of such agencies through one central organized system, from the raising of the money to the disbursing of the same, as differentiated in the budget. It saves money, annoyance, overlapping and disjointed service. It adds to the efficiency of service, and gets more out of the contributed dollar for the purpose contributed.

The Community Chest proposition, therefore, as involving the citizens of Atlanta is an economic problem. The sentiment feature cannot be lost sight of, but that feature can find more satisfactory response through system and cooperation and coordination than through the lack of either of these essentials in any success.

Atlanta has never failed, and it will not. The recent demonstration of a quickened Atlanta spirit will again manifest itself in the Community Chest undertaking.

THE TARIFF ISSUE.

According to news dispatches from Washington Representative Cordell Hull, democrat, of Tennessee, has served notice that he and other minority members of the ways and means committee, will seek a complete revision of the present tariff law, when congress convenes in December. Such legislation must necessarily come out of the ways and means committee, and there is no more outstanding tariff authority on that committee than the Tennesseean.

Tariff revision, like tax reduction, ought to be one of the major issues before congress, and it ought to be pitched purely upon economic and not upon political grounds. Revenue legislation has no place in party politics. The tariff has always been an issue of difference between the two major parties—more so in the earlier days of the parties than at present. Party lines used to be drawn on the questions of protection and free trade. But that day has passed. Democrats are not "free traders," and all republicans are not "protectionists." That is to say there is more of a disposition among the rank and file of American citizens, regardless of party affiliations, to adjust tariff duties to the best interests of all the people, taking all production, marketing and other economic factors into full consideration.

To illustrate, the high tariff duty on sugar is unwarranted and penalizes the 100,000,000 consumers with no other purpose than to protect the sugar beet interests of a comparatively few states. The present rates on wheat serve only to keep the prices of the bread loaf up, without being of any real value to growers. We grow more wheat than we consume. We import but little. The market is not influenced by importations but the bakers are influenced by the tariff.

The same rule applies in many American trade lines as influenced by domestic production and consumption.

On the other hand, take the vegetable oils. The foreign competition arises from oriental oils produced under incomparable labor conditions. Without a protecting—not a protective—tariff the American growers of peanuts especially would be practically ruined. The growers of cotton and beans would suffer.

Therefore, without regard to sections, or classes, or politics, tariff rates ought to be adjusted to domestic economic conditions, and not made the battle ax of party contests.

The present law is doing more to keep the high costs of living high than any other factor. It is not adjusted to the interests of the people. The flexible clause, giving executive authority to fix different than schedule rates, is a new approach to paternalism.

Representative Hull deserves the support of the American people, regardless of politics, in his effort to secure just and equitable revisions.

"Music," says the Philadelphia Record, "has been regarded as an accomplishment, but it proves to be a great business."

Seven Years After

Yes, seven years have flown since November 11, 1918. How quickly we forget. Perhaps it is well that we can forget, or at least banish from acute consciousness some of the experiences of life. A people could not live normally, solving the problems of the day and doing its tasks, if they had to carry, in acute consciousness, the stressful anxieties and the overheated emotions of 1917-18. It is well that in the everyday life we can live without pressure of such memories. But now and again we should look back and be able to see clearly and read intelligently the meaning of such experiences, else we shall lose the revealing light which the past has for the present. This is the justification for the marking of such national dates as November 11.

It is still easy to recall the delirium of joy which marked that date in 1918. Over and above all else in that wild emotional joy, there was the thought of the coming home of our boys. But some of them did not come back. Others came marred and maimed, bent and broken, for life. It is hard to believe in the normal industrial and social life of today that there are still something like half a million of those boys under the care of our government, partially or totally inefficient for life's duties. Yet that date, November 11, is kept in honor of a victory. Could we do better than pause once again and ask ourselves what was the meaning of this victory?

Brute Force.

No matter what fuller interpretation future historians may give to the world war, the victory was over brute force. When one looks back, especially to August and September, 1914, and the spring of 1918, there comes instinctively a gasp of horror as when we draw back from the edge of a precipice. How nearly physical force came at both of these periods to conquering the world. Steel, chemical explosives, poisonous gases—these unconscious, conscienceless things without respect for childhood or motherhood, art or religion, law or liberty—seemed about to crush the spiritual life of men. The finer things of the soul seemed ringed with an iron wall, which threatened to imprison them. One felt in those days as if a titanic physical might essayed to seize the moral kingdom, dethrone right, reverse all the ethical judgments of humanity, destroy its sentiments and dominate the aspirations of a world.

No matter what new light may be thrown upon the causes which lay back of the great world war, I am convinced that one fact will remain clear and significant. The conflicting ambitions and interests which divided nations and races were submitted to the arbitrament of force, and the final appeal of men, as if in desperation, was made to the supreme court of force. I insisted during the war and I insist now, that its horrors were not characteristically German. They were characteristic of the teaching of a certain type of patriotism—"my nation over all." It is the expression of a national egotism which is willing to gain national advantages at the expense of the other peoples of the world. It sets up a national god and teaches its children that he created the world and its blessings primarily for its own nationals. This same teaching, with its subtle poison permeating the arteries of American life, would Prussianize this land as certainly as it did the German people.

Patriotism.

Such a doctrine is the mother of the creed that a nation grows in power and prosperity in proportion to the growth of its armies and navies. It is the old fallacy of "Trade follows the flag." Ultimately it means to enthrone force as god. Now is a good time to examine the type of patriotism which is being taught our children. Of course they must be taught to love America. But back of that is the vital question, what does America mean? If it means that America is a close corporation, conducted solely for the benefit of its own citizens, indifferent to the welfare of the rest of the world, let us understand we are sowing seed which will reap a harvest of woe to our nation and the world. But if we teach them that America is a faith in the inalienable rights of humanity the world round, and that our nation must ever stand for the help and not the hurt of all mankind, then patriotism shall become a blessing to the entire world.

I believe this last interpretation of America was the ideal which possessed and inspired our boys to jeopard their lives upon the fields of France. If it was right for America to fight for that ideal in the days of war, is it not her supreme duty to live for that ideal in the days of peace. November 11 will never become the radiant date in our calendar, which it has a right to be, until our beloved country unites with the other nations of the world in working for a permanent peace.

The Movement to Georgia From Florida

Editor Constitution: In furthering Atlanta's splendid movement toward advertising Georgia and its wonderful possibilities, I am enclosing clipping from Marietta's local paper that I thought would be of interest to you and your readers. Please pay particular attention to the paragraph that I have encircled relative to the necessity of a state-wide advertising campaign. I have already noticed a change for the better in local real estate conditions, and feel, like Mr. Brewer, that within the next 12 months Georgia lands will realize a substantial enhancement.

I wish to take this opportunity of congratulating your daily in publishing this advertising movement as to best advertise Atlanta and Georgia in the manner in which you are so doing.

Yours for a bigger and better Georgia.

FRANK F. M'NEEL.
Marietta, Ga., October 1, 1925.

Mr. Brewer's Letter.

In the letter referred to by Mr. McNeel, H. B. Brewer writes him from Lakeland, Fla., as follows:

Have heard quite a few people down here say recently that they were going to close out their holdings in Florida this winter and go back home—too hot and too dry, they say. The novelty seems to be wearing off, at least with some.

Four different persons have told me they were going to Georgia after the first of the year and buy some farm lands. One of these parties has never been in the state, other than passing through on the train.

I have asked each of these people who have said they were going to buy lands in Georgia why they were going to buy them, and the reply was, in each case, that Florida real estate is now too high to be safe—a truly gambling game from now on; that Georgia farm lands are cheap, cheaper than they will ever be again, and are bound to double and redouble in value within the next two or three years, and the safest sure-profit investment they have heard of. Several men who came to Florida from Georgia within the last three years have voluntarily told me they were going back to Georgia and buy some land as quickly as they could get loose.

It surely is a pity that Georgia couldn't turn loose a state-wide advertising campaign right now and catch the rush of tourists and investment seekers that will be on their way to Florida this winter. Many hundreds of them will leave this state without investing, who would be glad to buy Georgia lands if they knew about them.

The first land selling to outsiders will be in southern Georgia because of its semi-tropical climate and level lands, but the move will spread, and I believe, not slowly.

You ought to be mighty optimistic—you're on the ground floor, and while it may be close picking for a year, or a little longer, with your live-wire tactics and square dealing principles, you are destined to very soon head a busy and popular real estate selling organization in a community of contented and prosperous people.

Not Criminality But Carelessness

Editor Constitution: Let any man stand for a few moments on the crowded street corners of Atlanta and watch pedestrians rush ruthlessly across red light signals and he will quickly see why we have so much criminality throughout our country.

It is an evidence of total disrespect for law. It is said that a London traffic cop can extend his hand and stop the surging multitudes on the streets of one of the greatest cities in the world. Why shouldn't the pedestrians obey the law as well as the automobile drivers? One of the streets leading to one of the city's largest schools a few days ago was filled with children walking out in the middle of the street when they should have been on the sidewalks for protection and would have thus avoided all danger from automobiles. Watch Whitehall or Peters street any time and see in crowded centers of the city people leisurely walking across the streets away from corners and imperiling the lives of numbers.

Abolition of Present System Employed by Coolidge To Give Out News To Public Seen as Easy Task

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

Washington, November 7.—In this paper last week I quoted some descriptions of that innovation which has grown up in our government under the name "the spokesman of the president," whereby twice each week the Washington correspondents gather at the white house and are given the views of the president about public questions, which views are then disseminated throughout the country in the newspapers. A description of the innovation was given, and allusion was made to objections to it, criticisms of it which have arisen lately.

The objections come mainly from those who think this innovation is too much in the interest of the president, that the views thus disseminated are largely in the nature of propaganda for the president, the administration and the republican party. The criticisms take the form chiefly that the president's views should be given directly, in quotation marks, and not through the medium of a so-called "spokesman." Some of the criticisms aim merely at change, saying that the president should be quoted directly, so that his critics and opponents would be able to give counter views and arguments. Others suggest abolition of the institution.

Abolition Easy.

(Abolition would be very easy. The innovation rests wholly on the will of the president. If he should desire to end it, either for motives coming from himself or because of criticism, he could end it very simply. He could just stop.)

Those who oppose the innovation arrive at a hostile state of mind about it chiefly through comparing it with something else. They recall what goes on in European governments. There the prime minister, occupying the position analogous to that of our president and the cabinet members, appear personally in parliament, state their views in parliament, and submit themselves to question, counter-argument and debate from the opposition. The hostile critics of the new American innovation compare the sheltered position President Coolidge occupies, his opportunity to give his views to the public without subjecting his views or himself to hostile debate, with what men like Prime Minister Baldwin, Lloyd George, Caillaux and others must endure. The critics, making this comparison, arrive at the conclusion that the European system is better. But the fact is, the European system is an essential part of the form of government there. In America there is no equivalent for it. These conferences with the newspaper men at the white house are solely an informal detail of the relations between the administration and the press.

Cleveland's System.

In Grover Cleveland's time there were no relations whatever between the president and the press. One can say that Cleveland never saw newspaper men, either in groups or privately. (If there were any exceptions the occasions were extraordinary, and the older Washington newspaper men do not remember them.) Cleveland disliked the press and had a conception of presidential propriety which forbade relations with newspaper men. He was quite sincere about it—there never was a more scrupulous president. Cleveland would not even attend the dinners of the Gridiron club. He regarded the jollity and informality of those occasions as beneath the dignity of his office.

Arrival of Wilson.

Wilson came to Washington accompanied by two phrases, "pitiless publicity" and "the white house door swings inward." In that spirit, which Wilson held strongly and honestly, he introduced what was at that time a startling innovation, frequent sessions at which all the newspaper men at Washington were permitted to come before the president and ask him questions about the public business. In the beginning the questions were oral. It was the fact that they were oral that led later to lapses. It is doubtful if the institution would have come to be what it is or would have lasted at all but for a change, made at a later date, which required that all the questions must be written out in advance.

When, in Wilson's time and also during a portion of Harding's time, the questions were oral it happened occasionally that embarrassing questions were asked, or trivial questions. Not all the 60 or 70 correspondents could have mature judgment or tact. Questions were plumped at Wilson which would have embarrassed any president or any man. He was led into situations equally embarrassing, whether he answered or was silent. Both Wilson and Harding had this experience. There was a touch of the imperious in Wilson's temperament, and he was not likely to continue in a situation in which he was repeatedly embarrassed and in which sometimes he had just cause for resentment.

Frank Discussion

Also in Wilson's time came two important events of such a nature that frank discussion of them with the correspondents could not be prudent. One was the difficulty with Mexico; the other our approach to and entrance into the great war. At a time when one or the other of these events overlapped all other matters of public interest it resulted that practically all the questions asked by the correspondents at the conference dealt with these serious public events. Many of these questions Wilson could not prudently answer. If he was tempted to answer offhand he might say things that would be misinterpreted abroad. If he declined to answer inferences might be made. On occasion he might give answers based on insufficient information, for no president can have complete information on all the questions that some one of 50 or 60 correspondents might ask.

Consequently, because of the Mexican trouble and the great war the innovation brought by Wilson was dropped by him. It was felt that he did not regard his experiment in "pitiless publicity" as comfortable.

Harding, when he came into office, revived the innovation and made it a fixed institution. He arranged conferences with the newspaper men to take place on the same days as the cabinet meetings. (The cabinet meets on Tuesday and on Fridays at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. The Tuesday conference with the newspaper men comes at 12 o'clock. The Friday newspaper conference was arranged for 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the idea being that one of the two weekly conferences should be adapted to giving the first news to evening papers; the other to morning papers.)

Oral Questioning.

Under Harding, at the beginning, the questions were oral and the familiar embarrassments inseparable from oral questions arose. Harding was asked questions he did not want to answer, which it was proper he should not answer. Occasionally also, in giving an answer to an unexpected oral question, he was led into discussing subjects about which his information could not be complete.

After a few such experiences Harding introduced the step that permitted the innovation to become permanent, a step without which the conferences would surely have lapsed, as they had lapsed in Wilson's time. Harding made it a rule that the questions should be written down and given to his secetary before the conferences, so that he had opportunity to look over them in advance, to reflect about the questions he decided to answer, and to omit any he preferred not to answer. With this change the institution continued until Harding died.

Fixed Institution.

When Coolidge became President he continued it and has kept it up, with ceremonious fidelity. The twice-a-week newspaper conferences are as fixed an institution as the cabinet meetings themselves.

These conferences, as now conducted, are open to all the accredited correspondents in Washington. Representatives of democratic papers and republican, correspondents whose dispatches reflect criticism of the administration—all attend. There is no discrimination. They can ask what questions they please (though the questions, being handed in in advance, give the spokesman the opportunity to remain silent on such questions as are in fields about which the president prefers his views should not be made public). The correspondents can treat the information they receive as they please. The purpose is to make the views of the president available to all the correspondents in Washington, without exception or discrimination.

We are enabled to compare this with what went on before this inovation came, by quoting an episode from a recently published book, "Released for Publication." The book is the memoirs of Oscar K. Davis, who for many years was the Washington correspondent of "The New York Times."

Mr. Davis recites that a story had been published in some other papers to the effect that friends and relatives of Roosevelt had profited by the purchase of the old Panama Canal property from the French owners. (The story made a stir at the time. Roosevelt sued two papers for libel. The story was never proved or justified. Historians do not credit it.)

Defends Roosevelt.

While Roosevelt was under this attack Mr. Davis sent a dispatch to his paper defending the president. What happened thereafter let Mr. Davis tell in his own words:

"This story was extremely pleasing to the president. . . . The publication of the story in 'The Times' had a decided effect on the controversy, and little more was heard of the charge that the president had permitted, or helped, relatives and friends to make money out of the canal purchase. Incidentally, it helped my relations with the white house so much that within the next 12 days I had nine stories from the president, all 'beats' of more or less importance."

Mr. Davis—"O. K." as Roosevelt called him—tells about one story he got from Roosevelt which reflects one of the humorous aspects of Roosevelt's administration, his willingness occasionally to give to a friendly newspaper man a story which his secretary of state, Elihu Root, thought should not be made public. As Mr. Davis tells it:

Gives Out Story.

"One of them was a story about Venezuela that I had tried in vain to get out of the state department. When I asked the president to get it for me, he said: 'I hate to do that, O. K.; Elihu always makes such a row with me when I go after the facts about anything he is handling, especially if subsequently any of those facts happen to find their way into the newspapers.' But he got the story, and gave it to me with a laugh, asking how the 'running debate' was getting on. By that he meant the 'debate,' as he described it, between the stories he was giving me for publication in the news columns of 'The Times' and the editorials critical of himself which the editorial page of the paper carried very frequently. He enjoyed this very much. His keen understanding of publicity values made him infinitely prefer the news columns to the editorial page. He would rather have one column of news a week than a page of editorials a day. 'The Times' on the other hand, enjoyed it also. For Mr. Van Anda, the managing editor, and the 'after breakfast' writers for the editorial page as well held the views that anything the president said, or did, or that emanated from him, was news worth printing. And 'The Times' holds very rigidly to the principle that the news columns belong to the news, and the editorial page to the editors, and no interference with either by the other is permitted. A second interesting 'beat' came out of the Canal story, in the shape of an accurate advance publication of a special message from the president to the senate."

That was a detail of the old system. It was very different from the present way.

Defend System.

It is significant that most of the older and more experienced Washington correspondents defend the new innovation. They would see no harm, but perhaps a certain amount of advantage in quoting the president directly. But they take decidedly the stand that the innovation is a useful one. That this view is prevailingly held by the older correspondents has some meaning, for they are not beneficiaries of the innovation to any extent. The more experienced correspondents have their own ways of finding out what is going on, their own source of news. They make use of the semi-weekly white house conferences, but are by no means dependent on them. If the innovation was abolished, and if we should go back to the old system, the more experienced correspondents would lose little and might benefit. In a situation—the situation that used to exist—where there are no official sources of news, those correspondents who have been longest here would be apt to get the largest amount and the more authentic kind of information. Their indorsement of the institution, their opposition to any step that might end it, is based on the public interest. They think it is useful for the public to have access to the president's views.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

A Voice From the Dark, by Eden Phillpotts, who is the author of quite a number of popular books of fiction. As it is something new for Mr. Phillpotts to write a detective and a mystery story, his latest book is attracting a good deal of attention. It is well written and the readers will find it quite clever and entertaining.

The author introduces you to the "ghost" in the first chapter. He weaves the story around this ghost and then ends it with the chapter, "The Ghost Again."

It is a splendid plot, the description of the Old Manor House hotel is quite realistic, and when John Ringrose, an old bachelor and a retired detective, at the invitation of the owner of the Old Manor House, finds himself on the inside of the four walls he begins his work of locating the ghost which will not rest.

It is quite an exciting mystery story with plenty of thrills and a romance that will offset the mystery which is gradually unraveled and with a climax that will well satisfy the reader. (The MacMillan Company, New York.)

EDEN PHILLPOTTS.

NEW FICTION RECEIVED:

The Venetian Glass Nephew. By Elinor Wylie, author of "Nets to Catch the Wind," etc. This new book is truly a successor to "Jennifer Lorn." It has a fascinating background which the reader will appreciate from the first chapter.

The critics as a whole agree that there was "nothing just like Jennifer." There is nothing exactly in the same vein as "The Venetian Glass Nephew." (George H. Doran company, New York.)

The Power and the Glory. A romance of the Great La Salle. By Gilbert Parker, with attractive illustrations. This is another book whose author is at the head of the list and in this, his last story, it is said "there is no more glowing page in American history than the chronicles of the exploration of this gallant gentleman who was at once a great man, a great statesman and a great adventurer."

This handsome book not only contains many interesting illustrations, but a map drawn in 1687 showing the routes followed by La Salle, whose exploits and adventures in attaining his goal are set forth. (Harper & Bros.)

The Heart of Katie O'Doone. By Leroy Scott, author of "Mary Reagan," "Daughter of Two Worlds," etc. Just Katie, the washerwoman, only 30 years old, but poverty and hard work have added another 20 as she argues with her 12-year-old daughter about going to school.

"I hate school! I hate education! Dad's got an education, and what good's it ever done him or done you? He still has 60 days to serve for that last big drunk," said the little Katie, who was in the fifth grade at school.

"You mustn't talk that way, Katie. Your father is a gentleman and has a good heart," replied the over-worked mother. "Dad educated? Dad pleasant? Well, if God ain't ever done nothin' else for me, I will always thank Him for not makin' me a man!"

This is the beginning of the story of a girl who did not want an education on account of the example made by her father. The story is made up of Katie's adventures after she runs away and which ends in a very colorful romance. (Houghton Mifflin company, Boston, Mass.)

BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

About Ellie at Sandacre. Eleanor Verdery is a child lover, for she has written a real story about children—that is, in this story there's a real little girl called Ellie, a little boy named Fran, a big nurse named Mathilda, a little dog named Gyp and a little canary called Obadiah, the father and mother bringing up the rear.

When we first meet them they are on the train on their way to the seashore, and Ellie was sitting at the window counting the cows for Fran, for he was a little brother and couldn't count, and what a good time they had on their way to Sandacre, for that was the name of the house-by-the-sea where they were going to spend the summer.

The first thing the children wanted to do was to go on an exploration trip and it was not long before the whole party had become acquainted with everything and then they were ready to go in bathing.

The story, with its attractive illustrations, as told by this charming writer will prove quite entertaining to all children, for it takes a little family like this to have a good time. (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.)

Ann's Family. By Janet Field Heath, with frontispiece and picture jacket in colors and pen and illustrations by L. J. Bridgman.

This is just the kind of story to please a whole family and is quite interesting as it unfolds the tale of Ann, a little orphan girl, whose uncles and aunts thought they were caring for her in turn, and of course they meant to be kind to her, but she was really taking care of them, longing all the time for some one to love and care for her.

And finally the time came when a new uncle decided to visit his old home, and of course he met Ann, and that's where the real story begins, for it takes good times and a happy little girl or boy as the hero or heroine to make everybody want to read it. (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.)

JUNIOR BOOKS.

Salt Water Stories. Retold from St. Nicholas. These books are made up of the very best selections of the sea stories of St. Nicholas, the subject being birds, animals, horses, dogs, outdoor life. But this volume is on the fascinating subject of the sea—it even has the tang of the sea.

Among the things that will appeal to the young reader will be the history of the development of the sailing craft of different nations, including the viking ships of the north, the kayak of our northern Indians, a history of lighthouses. The heroes are brave boys and popular sea captains. While there are only two stories about little girls, their bravery is commented and they will enjoy reading all about the brave sea captains, of real shipwreckers and of the work of the crew of life saving stations.

The Complete Limerick Book, the Origin, History and Achievements of the Limerick with over 400 selected examples. By Langford Reed, with 24 illustrations by H. M. Bateman.

"All hail to the town of Limerick
Which provides a cognomen, generic,
For a species of verse
Which is for better, or worse,
Is supported by layman and cleric."
(G. P. Putnam Sons, New York.)

The Cricket of Carador. By Joseph Alger and Ogden Nash, with illustrations by Christopher Rule, is a story for the little folks that is full of interesting incidents, but Cricket and his go-cart will give a few thrillers before the close of the story.

That's That! By Beth A. Retner. The title of this book is such a common saying with children that the writer decided she would weave a little story around it—"That's That!"

The book is filled with whimsical tales, stories of magic and with plenty of pictures, all so closely a part of the other that they cannot be separated. Among the characters that help to entertain the children are Wise Peter Foolish, Mister Tock Tick, Tooty Tooty, the Herb Doctor, the little black and white chicks and many others who will help the children to have a good time. While this is Miss Retner's first attempt to write a book, she is well known in her Beth Brown scenario pictures. (Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

The Chimes of Daskam High. By Agnes Miller. Picture jacket in colors and illustrations by Elisabeth B. Warren. There is no story that is more interesting for the boys and girls who have reached the junior high than to read a story about what other juniors are doing.

The story is woven around a group of American boys and girls and the natural tendency for leadership which can always be found among them, which is finally bestowed upon Jocelyn Gray. The characters are true to life and the interesting story is told by "one of them." (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.)

Patricia From New York. By Marguerite Murphy. Picture jacket in colors by Elizabeth Withington. Can you imagine a young girl who belongs to a prominent New York family and who has had every wish gratified not being spoiled? Just put yourself in her place for an hour at least and see if you wouldn't be spoiled?

Realizing this, her parents decided that they would take a trip abroad and send her to grandparents, good old-fashioned, sensible people, who lived in a little Minnesota town, and gave her the benefit of a healthy training in her home and in the high school. The results were good times, good friends and a pleasant stay after Priscilla becomes acclimated and shows that she, too, is true blue.

Coin and Crossbones. By T. Morris Longstreth. This is another thrilling story and is written in the first person by one of the boy heroes. It begins where "The Silent Five" left off, and is as follows:

This thriller, again written in the first person by one of the boy heroes, begins where "The Silent Five" left off, and with these prophetic words: "In the story of our earlier adventures on the island I had to leave off where blood began to flow. Prof said appearances would be misunderstood. Then there was the law. Even if our island does lie 20 miles off the coast of Maine, the law likes to have its finger in every pie or puddle, particularly if it is blood-puddle. So I had to shut down just where things were getting interesting." And so they cast off and the big adventure begins.

It is a story that thrills the boys' heart, for it is all about a buried treasure which has been almost located in the former story. Of course it is on a lonely island somewhere, and if the boys who read this thrilling story can do a little guess work and almost locate the treasure before the close of the story.

"The Silent Five" was the first of Mr. Longstreth's pirate stories, and in it the author made a sure place for himself in this popular field. And if that tale was well received the present book, in which the author has attained his stride—and it is a fast one—will be hailed as the pirate book of the year. It is written by a man who knows his subject and knows how to write picturesque and romantic boy stuff.

Trails End. By Beth B. Gilchrist, author of "Kit, Pat and a Few Boys" and other popular juvenile books. It is a most entertaining story about a winter camp. When you think of a camp you naturally think of swimming, fields and flowers, winding paths and tiny streams, of life in tents with the warm sunshine.

But this book tells about a winter camp up in the mountains of Vermont, which sounds chilly, but the description is equal to a summer thrill. Listen to this description: "It is a spot of magic beauty, with hills and mountains whose sides are covered with evergreens, the ground first carpeted with pine needles and the tree branches weighted down by great blobs of whitest snow—a scene of rare charm and gloriously thrilling to the fourteen city and town girls who see for the first time snow that stays white. When you go to the north woods on a camp you find the winter rigging entirely different from the summer, for there are skates, skis, snowshoes, blankets, winter clothes and heavy shoes. From this list you will note what girls do in a winter camp, and sometimes, as in this story, they encounter a real blizzard, but prove to be equal to the emergency.

These girls came from all parts of the United States and the first lesson they had to learn was adaptability, but when they went to say good-bye they were real chums, strong and enduring bonds had welded the chain of friendship and they were making pledges of enjoying another winter camp the next year.

It is a real human interest story for girls and is healthy reading. (The Century company, New York.)

Standard on Long Bar. B. M. S. Spalding, S. J. A little country town, a deserted island on the Mississippi, a stranded launch is sufficient material to arouse not only interest but a boy's imagination. How come?

The story is woven around two boys who were rivals—each one being in the employ of a steamship owner. The story is filled with exciting adventures that cause the boys many thrills before an amicable adjustment is brought about.

Sunshine and Freckles, by Francis J. Finn, is the story of an ex-football star who decides he will go to Florida and his experiences while down in the millionaire state.

Mary Rose goes home from boarding school to spend her vacation and Mary Mabel Wirries tells the girls all about the incidents and the accidents that she experiences.

Martha Jane, is an usual title for a girl's book, but it is the name of a most attractive little Georgia girl who sometimes visits Atlanta and is always a welcome visitor to The Constitution. Now, this little girl, is a fine character, too, wholesome, full of fun, and everybody loves her. (Benziger Bros., New York city.)

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

Little Robinson Crusoe of Paris. By Eugenia Foa, translated by Julia Olcott, with introduction by Clara Whtiehill Hunt, with eight illustrations in colors by Marion Mildred Oldham. This charming story belongs to the "Stories All Children Love Series." (Lippincott's, Philadelphia.)

That's That! By Beth A. Retner, with attractive illustrations by Carroll C. Snell, who dedicates the beautiful little volume of children's stories to "My dear and lovely mother who was once a little girl, and at heart still is!"

The author tells several very entertaining stories for the little folks and in each case she ends it with "That's That!" Miss Ritner is well known by the children for she is the author of the Beth Brown pictures. (Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

The Cricket of Carador. By Joseph Alger and Ogden Nash, with illustrations by Christopher Rule. The story is woven around a little girl by the name of Lucy and the adventures she experiences with Cricket and his Go-Cart. (Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

The Little Wooden Doll. By Margery Williams Bianco. The pictures were by Pamela Bianco, and the children will all enjoy them.

The Pope's Mule. A story found in the Grasshopper's library. By Alphonse Daudet. The pictures are made by Herouard. How the children will enjoy the mule.

Dame Wiggins of Lee and Her Seven Wonderful Cats. It is profusely illustrated with colored pictures. It is taken from a famous ballad told and sung in England. In 1885 wrote some new verses for it. In 1925 Mr. Roy Melrum made these new pictures.

A Dog of Flanders. By Louise De La Ramee who tells a story for the children about a brave little boy and his equally brave little dog who grew up together in a little village near Antwerp. This little story is charmingly illustrated.

King Penguin by Richard Henry Horne, author of "The Memoirs of a London Doll," with pictures by Jilly Daugherty, and which was discovered by Frances Margaret Fox. It is a legend of the South Sea Isles. It is a splendid little story for boys and girls, too, and it contains many laughable pictures by Jimmy Daugherty.

A Visit From St. Nicholas. By Clement C. Moore with new pictures by Constance Whittemore. This delightful story about Santa Claus which is known to every child—'Twas the night before Christmas!, etc.—is told again with very attractive pictures in color.

These books belong to the Little library published by the MacMillan Company, New York.

Judge Eakes Says Plan For Unification Is Best

(The following is published at the request of friends of unification):

BY JUDGE MATHER M. EAKES.

The matter of unification has been much discussed from every viewpoint by the opposing factions in our church and this writer cannot hope to add greatly of either knowledge or wisdom in the controversy.

However, of all the wide variety of plans that have been proposed, this one appears to offer the greatest promise for future peace and cooperation between the divisions of Methodism. Complete union would not be possible without placing our minority church at the mercy, and under dominance of the great majority church. No southerner who loves his church and its traditions would assent to that.

But the plan now proposed avoids our being "swallowed up." This federation plan leaves our church intact and absolute in the control of its own affairs as one jurisdiction, and yet gains for it all of the advantages which could come from cooperation in all endeavors jointly undertaken. It cannot be disputed reasonably, that the jurisdictional conference is supreme within its jurisdiction, and determines for itself as a unit what is "distinctively connectional" other than as expressed in article V. There can be no reasonable objection to the powers explicitly given to the general conference, and in the exercise of those powers our minority church is fully protected by section 1, article V, providing that: "Every vote in the general conference shall be by jurisdictions and shall require the accepted majority of each jurisdiction." This gives our jurisdictional conference the veto power over any improvident or unwise proposal or purpose of the other jurisdiction.

Negro Problems.

The negro has been made a great "bogie" by the opposition. Bishop Cannon, in a very sane and well-tempered pamphlet has shown the folly of this position. Few things give the southern white man less concern than the handling of the negro—in fact, for many generations now the southerner has met the negro problem in infinite variety, and has invariably found a solution in keeping with his own ideals and purposes, and he will easily solve all difficulties that may arise from this newly found "bogie."

On the other hand, the white man of the north is becoming more acquainted with the difficult "negro problem" every passing year. Experience and contact is bringing him the more readily to the southerner's viewpoint. And it is not improbable that the southern church could be of invaluable service to "our northern brethren" in meeting and solving these race problems in a different way. Certainly there can be no cause for fear or any negro bishop being "over" the southern white church in any actual sense. It simply cannot be done, and all the world knows it.

However, many of our laymen and some of our preachers are awake to the portentous fact that not only among Methodists, but among all Protestants, divisions must cease, and whether by union or federation a united front must be presented, or Protestantism will be engulfed.

May we not hope that, in some way, known only to Him whose ways are inscrutable, the follies of men may be set at naught and His hosts may go forth to battle, not among themselves, but with the common enemy and evil forces of life.

ALPHA NEW POLICY EFFECTIVE MONDAY

Big Productions Are To Be Run for Second Time Here

Sol Samuels, Alpha theater manager, made an announcement Saturday that starting with Monday, with Mary Pickford, in "Little Annie Rooney" that his house would play week runs of the bigger and better movies in Atlanta on their second run here. He already has booked such pictures as Chaplin's "Gold Rush," Norma Talmadge's "Secrets," Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q," and many other of the finer productions.

Next week's picture is "Little Annie Rooney," drama of tenement life in New York in which Mary Pickford stars. Combining comedy and drama, smiles and tears, children's gang battles and a pretty love story, "Little Annie Rooney" is the type of play in which the public loves to see Mary Pickford and the type she can do as no other actress can.

"Little Annie Rooney" is as Irish as its name, and as Irish as the curly-haired little ragamuffin who plays the title role. It deals with the young daughter of an east side policeman whose playmates are about 30 young boys, and who enters into the gang fights and rows of these tenement lads with all the vigor at her command.

In the dramatic scenes she does some of the finest and most convincing work of her whole screen career.

She is sweet and appealing as the sweetheart of her "Joe," and through the entire picture the artistry of Mary Pickford is again revealed.

EPISCOPAL CHURCHES UNITE FOR TRAINING

The Episcopal churches of the city will unite next week in a teacher training institute for Sunday-school teachers and officers. The institute will be held at All Saints' church, beginning November 2, and running through the 6th. The first class will begin every afternoon at 5 o'clock. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock. The following courses will be taught:

The pupil, the teacher, the Bible, the prayer book, church school ideals and church school administration. The teachers completing the courses will be given credit towards the diploma offered by the national department of religious education of the Episcopal church. The courses will be taught by Dr. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., and Miss Annie Morton Stout, field workers for the department.

"THE KIDDIE FROLIC" IS HOWARD PROLOGUE

"The Kiddie Frolic," a highly entertaining prologue in which over 40 talented Atlanta children take part, will be presented this week at the Howard in connection with the showing of the feature picture. The Howard orchestra also will offer a most entertaining musical program, with Jan Rubini conducting, while Melvin P. Ogden, the organist, will play another of his clever novelty numbers, "Lullaby Lane."

The prologue will be in the nature of a miniature vaudeville bill, the children appearing in song and dance numbers. Under the direction of LeRoy J. Prinz, they have been rehearsing for several weeks and a most interesting performance is promised.

A rather unique feature will be a scene representing a motion picture studio with the youngsters taking the parts of famous screen favorites, such as Charlie Chaplin, Jackie Coogan, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Harold Lloyd, Gloria Swanson and others. In the Toy Shop scene, the children will appear as dolls of all nations, appropriately costumed in the native garb of the countries represented. Five little girls, in hoopskirts, will dance in the "When Grandma Was a Girl" number and a score of children will take part in the "Ballet Les Enfants."

Among the children who will take part in the prologue are Barbara Chaffee, Sarah May Lloyd, Martha Murat, Clothilde O'Rourke, Barbara Cohen, Michael Maier Cohen, June Davenport, Doris Corrie, Janie Maud Williams, Mary Lohman, Beverly Wilds, Vivian Freeman, Nickey Zachary, Thornton Ward, John Schultz, Maurice Tuttman, Buddie Wager, Eloise Veno, Everlee Eibel, Sarah Ellen Haynes, Alverta Sedgwick, Mary Shields, Jeannet Young, Wilma Robak, Margaret Ellis, Annie Clyde Edgar, Claude-Starr Wright, Marjorie Ennis, Helen Ennis, Bertrand Houser, Dorothy Young, Louise Miller, Louise Davis, Billy Griffin, Toots Dunbar, Freda Sullivan.

TEARLE RISES FROM PUGILISM TO IDOLISM

CONWAY-TEARLE

From pugilist and billiard marker to screen idol is perhaps an inadequate biography for one who has risen as high as Conway Tearle, but it does sum up an interesting stretch in the career of this distinguished actor.

Born in New York and educated in England, Tearle was the son of Osmond Tearle, a famous Shakespearean actor of his day. He admits that he filled in the gap between his London education and his early stage training by being a professional welterweight boxer in England and even a billiard marker. The elder Tearle, however, finally prevailed upon his son to betake himself to the theater, where his early stage training began under Ellen Terry, Lena Ashwell, Sir Charles Wyndham and other London stage stars of note. Before long he was starring in "Ben Hur" at the Drury Lane theater. Other great successes followed and finally his migration to the American stage, where he has supported Ethel Barrymore, Viola Allen, Billie Burke and numerous others. His advent into motion pictures met with still greater success.

His earlier screen productions include "Stella Maris," "The Reasons Why," "Virtuous Wives," "A Virtuous Vamp," "She Loves and Lies," "One Week of Love," "Bella Donna," "The Eternal Flame" and "Ashes of Vengeance," appearing with Norma Talmadge in the last two. In the last year he has played leading roles in such First National pictures as "Just a Woman," "Heart of a Siren" with Barbara La Marr and "Flirting With Love" with Colleen Moore. His latest vehicle is June Mathis' elaborate production of "The Viennese Medley," in which he shares honors with Anna Q. Nilsson.

Tearle is five feet eleven inches in height, weighs 180 pounds, and has dark hair and blue eyes.

LEGION HEAD INVITED TO VISIT COLUMBUS

Columbus, Ga., November 7.—(Special.)—At a meeting of the Charles S. Harrison post, American Legion, it was decided to invite National Commander John R. McQuigg to visit Columbus and Fort Benning in 1926. The resolution followed the reading of a letter from Commander McQuigg, written in reply to a letter of congratulations from the local post upon his election to the position of national commander at the recent convention in Omaha.

Commander McQuigg thanked the local post for its congratulations and said that he intended to visit Georgia in 1926. Resolutions were then adopted instructing the adjutant of the post to write the national commander and urge him to visit Columbus.

straight to the point, without detouring, all trimmed and skinned, ready for serving."

It is a book that will be fine for a rainy-day party in the mountains or on the home library. It will dry dull care away and cause everything from a smile to a hilarious laugh. When you go to a spend-the-day party select you a dozen or so for bright sallies, it is just the book for a salesman when he starts out on his territory, and he will find it a cheerful asset to dull business. A Nature Mystic's Clue, by Dwight Goddard, who tells the story of David Lisle, a Nature Mystic, who was the son of a Canadian woodchopper and whose mother was a teacher from New England. Printed by the Vermont Printing Co., Battleboro, Vt.

Life's Little Pitfalls. By A. Maude Royden, who says with reference to the book she has written "The ancient difficulty of not doing the good that we would and donig the evil that we would not, is one which disturbs more minds than any intellectual problems. The writer says that this, too, is her personal problem, and that is the reason why she is trying to do a little good by writing the above book so as to help her fellowmen. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

The Book of Ancient Greece. An introduction to the history and civilization of Greece from the coming of the Greeks to the conquest of Corinth by Rome 146 B. C. By Dorothy Mills, M. A., author of "The Book of the Ancient World," and teacher of history at the Brearley school, of New York. The book contains sixteen illustrations and two maps.

The book tells the story simply of the great and lasting civilization spread with the coming of the Greeks—and the effects their era has left us. (G. P. Putnam's Sons., New York.)

To complete the Hoot Gibson schedule for the year Universal has substituted "Click of Triangle T" by Oscar Friend to take the place of "Kings Up" by Ralph Spence. "Kings Up" will probably be used the following year. Gibson, who has just finished his role in "The Indians Are Coming," will start the new production next week.

"THE TOWER OF LIES" LOEW'S FEATURE FILM

Cast Includes Beautiful Norma Shearer and Lon Chaney.

In "The Tower of Lies," the sensation success directed by Victor Seastrom, Loew's Grand theater this week will present one of the notable picture hits of the year. The distinguished actor, Lon Chaney, and the beautiful Norma Shearer, who were costars in "He Who Gets Slapped," will fill leading roles in the new production.

Without doubt the popularity of Norma Shearer and Lon Chaney, costar, add to the attraction of the production but Seastrom's directorial genius has given the picture a touch of appeal that cannot go unheeded. We had thought that Seastrom had reached the pinnacle in "He Who Gets Slapped," in which Miss Shearer and Chaney also appeared, but that picture could never attain the heights reached by "The Tower of Lies."

The picture is a screen adaptation of Selma Lagerlof's popular novel, "The Emperor of Portugallia." The continuity was prepared by Agnes Christine Johnston, who has many successful scenarios to her credit and who must have gotten everything out of the original story for her screen version.

At no time in the careers of Lon Chaney or Norma Shearer has either of these two stars been given such a wonderful screen vehicle. Miss Shearer has far outdone any of her former successes and Chaney has made a very radical departure from his usual characterizations with highly gratifying results.

The two are supported by a remarkable cast, which includes: Ian Keith, Claire McDowell, William Haines, Edward Connelly, David Torrence, Anna Schaefer, Leo White and Bodile Rosing.

"The Tower of Lies" must be commended for the heights and depths reached and for pathos which has been translated to the screen. There have been few pictures which grip at the heartstrings and bring smiles of joy at unexpected moments as does this one.

Selma Lagerlof, the famous Swedish novelist, bids fair to become as popular in America as she is in Europe.

Many motion picture directors, who have followed European film production closely, believe that "Gosta Berling's Saga," made by the Svenska Film Industre, Stockholm, Sweden, is one of the best, if not the best, European films ever produced.

This film was a screen adaptation of Selma Lagerlof's first novel and like the book the picture was a sensation abroad. Incidentally it went a long way towards creating for Svenska Film Industre the great reputation which it has since enjoyed.

Louis B. Mayer, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, while abroad recently, secured the film rights to "The Emperor of Portugallia," Miss Lagerlof's prize-winning novel, and it has been filmed under the direction of Victor Seastrom with Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer in the starring roles.

SCHOOL OF HEALTH WILL OPEN TODAY

The school of health will meet this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at the chamber of commerce assembly room No. 2 and every Sunday during the fall and winter. A healing lesson will follow every lecture.

Miss Florence Amitage, of New York, will present a series of free lectures on self-expressions in the near future.

The four end men of the club are Riley F. McKoy, Rome; Noble Arnold, Parrott, Ga.; Marvin Pharr, Atlanta, and Roy L. Hurst, Chattanooga.

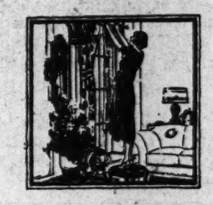

ALABAMA ROAD HEAD TO VISIT HUNTSVILLE

Huntsville, Ala., November 7.—(Special.)—John A. Rogers, president of the Alabama highway commission, has accepted an invitation to deliver an address at the semi-annual get-together dinner for civic and business clubs of Huntsville on November 12 by the junior chamber of commerce.

The visit of Mr. Rogers is of especial significance in view of the fact that there are several new road projects being undertaken here and at least one bridge enterprise which is of interest to three north Alabama counties.

Her Rheumatism Vanished!

After two years of agony, this woman thanks Tanlac for restoring lost health

*For two years, Mary Arpentigny, had rheumatism in her right arm and hand so bad she couldn't lift a comb to her hair. Indigestion made matters worse.

Finally her brother urged her to try Tanlac and improvement came with the first bottle. "Now," writes Mrs. Arpentigny, "my appetite is fine, my indigestion is gone and every sign of rheumatism has left me. I only hope others will profit by my experience."

*Authentic statement; address on request.

Balkite

the Noiseless Battery Charger can be used while the set is in operation

Balkite Trickle Charger

Charges both 4 and 6-volt radio "A" batteries at about .5 amperes. Usable in three ways: 1. With a low capacity battery for sets now using dry cells. 2. With storage battery sets of few tubes. 3. As a "trickle" or continuous charger with sets of as many as 6 dry cell or storage battery tubes. Fits in the usual dry cell compartment. Price $10

Balkite "B" Replaces "B" batteries and supplies plate current from the light socket. With its use your "B" current supply is always exactly what is required. Has no bulbs. Fits practically all sets of 5 tubes or less, and most 6 tube sets. Fits in the usual dry cell compartment. Price $35

Balkite "B" II The same popular model as offered last year. Same as Balkite "B" above, except it will fit any set up to 8 tubes or more. Price $55

The Balkite Battery Charger for Radio "A" 6-volt batteries is entirely noiseless in operation. Its advantages are obvious. It can be used while the radio set is in operation. If your battery should be low you merely turn on the charger and operate the set. It cannot short-circuit, discharge, or damage the battery by overcharging. Current consumption about ½ cent per hour. Operates from 110-120 AC 60 cycle current. Special model for 50 cycles. Also for 25-40 cycles with 1.5 ampere charging rate. Price $19.50

No bulbs—Permanent

Like all other Balkite Radio Power Units, the Balkite Battery Charger is a permanent piece of equipment, has no bulbs, nothing to replace, break, or get out of order, and requires no other attention than the infrequent addition of water.

Balkite Radio Power Units are the ideal power supply for any radio set. They provide uniform constant current to both the "A" and "B" circuits. The other three units are described to the left. Whatever type of set you own, Balkite Radio Power Units will serve it.

SUNSHINE KIDDIES AT RIALTO AS FEATURE

"A Son of His Father" Is Theater's Film For the Week.

The Rialto theater this week branches out into the original with a program that will divide its prominence between the stage and the screen.

"A Son of His Father," from the novel by Harold Bell Wright, with Bessie Love, Warner Baxter and Raymond Hatton in the leading roles, will be the feature picture.

The famous Sunshine Kiddies from Hollywood return to Atlanta for a week at the Rialto, offering their famous vaudeville act behind the footlights.

The Kiddies, according to advance reports, have greatly improved their act over that of last year. Their performance offers everything in the singing and dancing line. These children, ranging in age from three to fourteen, sing and dance and give a vivacious show.

Interpretations of some of the popular songs of the day by these clever children would do credit to the most famous adult performers, it is said. Their dancing is especially clever but their singing is equally as good.

Among the Kiddies' dances that have always scored big success are the butterfly duet and the Dutch shoe dance. The smallest member of the troupe is a lovable little darling whose work has tremendously struck and pleased big audiences everywhere the act has appeared this season.

The Kiddies are "stage children," whose parents are vaudeville and legitimate performers, and who are giving their heirs stage training in this unique school. The other scholastic work of the members is kept up with their stage work, for classes are held every day for them in all the studies.

"A Son of His Father" is a western picture of the highest type.

The story, written by Harold Bell Wright, was photographed on the actual locale the author mentions in his work. Arizona with its rolling plains of arid wastes, the grand canyon and the majestic Colorado flowing through it—all these are shown. Just seeing them would make your evening at the movies a success.

But when this gorgeous wild country serves as a background for one of the most interesting stories that has ever been photographed, one's cup of joy should be filled to overflowing. "A Son of His Father" is Wright at his best. Real men, not the cowboys of imagination are shown.

A scene showing a troop of United States cavalry coming to the rescue of the hero and heroine will make you want to rise right out of your seat and cheer. The stampede of a hundred horses from the smuggler's corral puts over a thrill. The swooping down of the smugglers on a victim's cattle crams some more action into a picture already jammed full of rip-roaring pep.

"When Paramount makes a 'Western,' it becomes a 'Western' in the real sense of the word."

And what a cast! Remember Warner Baxter the good looking hero of "Rugged Water?" This puts him in the first western role he's ever had, and maybe he doesn't make good. Bessie Love, the heroine of "The Lost World," is the little Nora O'Shea, a girl from "the old sod." Raymond Hatton as Charlie Grey, an invalid from the east, trying to get well on a diet of eggs and milk, has one of the best comedy character roles of his career. All three are featured. Walter McGrail, heading the supporting cast, is the kind of a villain one thinks is deserving of the hard knocks he gets.

Victor Fleming, produce of "Code of the Sea," "To the Last Man" and other dramas of outdoor life, put everything into making this one stand above them all.

SCREEN

Lower left, scene from "Are Parents People?" at Cameo. Next, scene from "The Limited Mail" at Alamo No. 2. Next, scene from "A Son of His Father" at the Rialto. COLLEEN MOORE STARS METROPOLITAN PICTURE

The Metropolitan picture this week bring to view the modern American girl as we see and know her today. Our own Colleen Moore takes the lead in Israel Zangwill's big stage success "We Moderns," directed by J. Francis Dillon. In support of Colleen is Jack Mulhall, Cleve Morrison, Carl Miller and other notables.

The story is laid in one of the rich American homes where the children are of the rapid-moving, "modern models," while their parents are of the good, old, yesterday type. The children have an utter contempt for the ways of the past generation and live only in thought of going on tomorrow.

The girls fall in love with a married man of means, who soon proves what he really is.

Colleen, who plays the role of the daughter, then turns to her regular and more substantial love.

In the end they both come to realize that their parents, despite their old ideas and misunderstandings, are not such a bad lot of old folks after all.

In "We Moderns" Colleen Moore has one of the greatest roles she ever played and she never was more perfect than in the picture. The film is considered one of the most interesting ever made. Local moviedom has been hearing of it and now it's coming, surrounded by a group of vaudeville and musical artists who have achieved popular acclaim throughout the length and breadth of the nation.

Rita Owin has flashed across the firmament during the past few months as America's most startling young dancer, being even more wildly acclaimed in her solo numbers than when she held the spotlight in the Follies.

Young Tevis Huhn, pampered son of wealth and member of one of the biggest and oldest banking families in the world, rebelled against Princeton and Oxford courses and took up the lowly banjo. Although never having taken a lesson in the playing of the instrument, "picking it up during and after the war," he says, he is one of the foremost manipulators of its strings of the present day.

Two successful new Broadway hits open the program by Leide and his Metropolitan orchestra: "My Swiss and My Sugar." For the feature picture. "Trouble," from Al Jolson's new Winter Garden show "Big Boy," has been selected, and it will serve to introduce Colleen Moore. The News and the Pathe Review will be scored with the usual Metropolitan brilliance. Don't miss this week's bill.

Palace Theater.

The week at the Palace opens with "So This Is Marriage," a feature which has come to be known as a celluloid sermon because of the story, which it brings—so applicable to modern times and modern thought. Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagle have been cast in the leading roles, and the support includes such well-known faces as Lew Cody, Clyde Cook, Edward Connelly and John Boles. The Biblical scenes in this feature are done in "technicolor," the same process which was used in "The Ten Commandments" and provide a dramatic spectacle which thrills and convinces. "So This Is Marriage" will be shown Monday and Tuesday.

Wednesday brings "The Rosary," a symphony in human emotions and a new version of the dramatic success of the past decade. It is a human play of three great loves—one sweet, one sad, and one forever unrequited. The appeal of the wonderful old ballad is in every scene of the play.

"The Roughneck," with George O'Brien in the title role, comes for Thursday and Friday. It is a screen adaptation of Robert W. Service's yarn and breathes the atmosphere of the far north with all its deeds of valor and bravery. It winds its way through 'Frisco's old Barbary Coast, on to tropical seas, and there is nothing but action, action, action.

"Head Winds," with House Peters, closes the bill on Saturday.

METROPOLITAN FANS WILL SEE REAL STARS

The third number in a series of big-time vaudeville features supplementing the regular high-class motion picture and musical program at the Metropolitan theater will bring to Atlanta two of the most-talked-about artists in the nation and Colleen Moore in "We Moderns," a super film attraction.

Rita Owin, late sensational dancing star of Ziegfeld's Follies, and Tevis the banjo influenced his career in the Prince of Wales, whose love for the banjo influenced his career in vaudeville, are a duo of artists who will be seen and heard by thousands this week at the Metropolitan.

Leide's Metropolitan orchestra will present "My Swiss and My Sugar," as a musical feature, while a Pathe Review will picture Ann Pennington in "Twinkle Toes," supplemented by the weekly Metropolitan News and Views film.

Two Genuine Stars.

Rita Owin has flashed across the firmament during the past few months as America's most startling young dancer, being even more wildly acclaimed in her solo numbers than when she held the spotlight in the Follies. She is a most charming miss with an educated toe that holds greatest promises critics assert.

Young Tevis Huhn, pampered son of wealth and member of one of the biggest and oldest banking families in the world, rebelled against Princeton and Oxford courses and took up the lowly banjo. Although never having taken a lesson in the playing of the instrument, "picking it up during and after the war," he says, he is one of the foremost manipulators of its strings of the present day.

Huhn, heir to the millions of his grandfather, George A. Huhn, retired Philadelphia banker, left club life and gave up his society friends for the banjo picking art. Instead of the close friendship of the Prince of Wales he acquired the friendship of thousands of the rank and file and he is certain to add to his circle of admirers when he appears here daily beginning Monday at the Metropolitan theater.

In "We Moderns" Colleen Moore has one of the greatest roles she ever played and she never was more perfect than in the picture. She is supported by a cast of notable players and the film is considered one of the most interesting ever made. Local moviedom has been hearing of it and now it's coming, surrounded by a group of vaudeville and musical artists who have achieved popular acclaim throughout the length and breadth of the nation.

Third in Series.

This week's program at the Metropolitan is the third in the series of big-time attractions which the management has booked for the fall and winter months and has every promise of being the real topnotcher of the entire fine series.

Few theaters in the nation are keeping pace with the exceptionally ambitious program undertaking sponsored by the Metropolitan management; although eastern theaters are beginning to accept the trend of the movie patron's love for vaudeville and motion pictures together. The idea is gaining marked popularity, although proving of tremendous strains on the purse strings of movie theater owners.

Metropolitan officials, however, determined upon offering Atlanta patrons an opportunity to see the best in movies and vaudeville at popular prices with a view to obtaining some expression of the general views of Atlantans. The first two weeks of the "experiment" have proven beyond all questions that Atlanta "has arrived" at the big-time stage, and throughout the coming season the best money is able to procure will be brought to this city.

Douglas MacLean in Newest Comedy Is Howard Offering

In "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the big feature picture at the Howard theater this week, Douglas MacLean, one of the most popular light comedians on the screen today, has a role that is a laugh-getter of the most robust sort. From beginning to end, the picture is screamingly funny and a sure cure for the blues.

The story was written originally as a novel by Earl Derr Biggers and was a tremendous success. George M. Cohan, famed as writer and producer of sure-fire stage hits, read it and recognized its possibilities as a play. Produced as such, it was instantly popular and during its extended run on Broadway was acclaimed as one of that season's best comedies.

The screen version is from the Cohan play, with only one or two minor changes, which really enhance its attractiveness. MacLean plays the role of a young writer who is terribly in love with the daughter of his publisher. He has promised father-in-law-that-is-to-be a novel by a certain time, but thoughts of his lady fair drive all others out of his head and he is suddenly brought down to everyday affairs by the publisher's threat that, unless the manuscript of the novel is in his hands by Monday, there'll be no wedding.

As Monday happens to be only 24 hours away, Douglas decides that speed and solitude will be absolutely necessary. Baldpate Inn, a summer hotel that is closed during the winter, seems to offer a nice quiet retreat, as the place is without a tenant except for the caretaker. So, determined to write the novel in record time and thereby win the hand of the girl he loves, Douglas, accompanied by his portable typewriter and a sheaf of paper, goes to the inn and begins work.

Then the fun begins. From that time on the spectator is simply carried off his feet by the fast going action, the many surprises, the thrills and comedy effects.

The man who directed MacLean in this picture is Fred Newmeyer. He it was who also directed Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," "A Sailor Made Man," "Safety Last," all of them great comedy successes.

MacLean also has been fortunate in surrounding himself with a company of very capable players who are responsible in no small measure for the big success of the picture. Edith Roberts, who, by the way, is exceptionally good to look at, is "the" girl, and another beauty, Betty Francisco, also has an important role.

"Proud Heart," Rudolph Schildkraut's premiere screen appearance in America, for whose benefit the unprecedentedly popular "Phantom of the Opera" was taken off at the Astor theater, opened with a chorus of acclaim seldom witnessed in blase New York. It has all the emotional appeal of "Over the Hill," "Abie's Irish Rose" and "Humoresque" rolled into one.

In order to inject as much romance into the title as possible, Universal has decided to call Aaron Hoffman's play, "Two Blocks Away," which Harry Pollard has just completed at Universal City, "The Cohens and Kellys." The Cohens are George Sidney, Vera Gordon, Bobby Gordon and Olive Hasbrouck, while the Kellys are Charles Murray, Jason Robards, Kate Price and Mickey Bennett.

'The Gorilla,' Mystery And Laughs, Comes To Atlanta Theater

Local theatergoers will have an opportunity at the Atlanta theater tomorrow (Monday) night of seeing "The Gorilla," in which metropolitan newspaper reviewers say there is more mystery than in a combination of all other mystery plays produced within the past ten years. The play has been thrilling and delighting audiences in New York for months and it comes here heralded as an unusually attractive entertainment. "The Gorilla" will be seen at the Atlanta theater throughout the coming week with matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

The arch criminal is a master mind in crime, who gives himself the nickname of "The Gorilla." He gives his victims advance notice that they have been selected as his prey and he leaves the imprint of a gorilla's paw wherever he has been, thus keeping everybody in a ferment of excitement. At times the scenes are intensely thrilling, only to be succeeded by incidents that provoke the wildest hilarity. On account of its comedy the play has been called "the funniest show on earth."

The action takes place on the country estate of Cyrus Stevens in a lonely section of Long Island. It is announced by radio that "The Gorilla" is coming there and thrilling scenes follow in rapid succession. Not for a moment does the audience get an opportunity to relax. Stevens is the prospective victim of the arch criminal. Mr. Mulligan and Mr. Garrity, two of the dullest detectives who ever tried to follow a clue, arrive to protect the head of the house from harm. Their innumerable blunders are responsible for a whirlwind of laughter. At midnight the lights go out and when they come on everything seems to be as it was before with the exception that Stevens has apparently fainted and slumped forward in his chair. Word comes that a gorilla has been seen upstairs and while others go to investigate, Garrity remains in the room. Presently the figure in the chair stealthily arises. Although dressed in clothes similar to those of Stevens he is not Stevens, but a character called "The Stranger." He pounces upon the unsuspecting Garrity and, after binding him, disappears. This is only one of many unexpected incidents. One of the most thrilling scenes is the kidnaping of a young woman by an unmistakably real and ferocious gorilla. It would be cheating the reader out of two and a half hours of interest to go further into the plot. It is sufficient to say there is a new development at least every two minutes.

"Lady Be Good," Smart Musical Comedy Coming To the Atlanta Theater

"Lady Be Good," known as the "smart musical comedy" of the past theatrical season in New York, will open a week's engagement at the Atlanta theater, commencing Monday evening, November 16, with the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

This clever musical comedy enjoyed over eleven months' run at the Liberty theater, New York, and was highly commended for not only its popular musical numbers, but also for its snappy dancing chorus and pleasing and witty book.

The story is by those well-known authors of musical comedy, Guy Bolton and Fred Thompson, and they have been well assisted in the musical score by George Gershwin, whose "jazz" lyrics have now become both the talk of this country and also on the other side.

A company of over fifty is carried, among them being Lolita Anna Westman, Sam Burton, Leonard Sillman, Richard La Marr, Wilfred Jessop, Olga Nova, Bert Bennett, Royal Thayer and others, together with that pleasing, youthful dancing and singing chorus of boys and girls whose individuality are a delight and joy.

Another attractive feature of "Lady Be Good," is the added attraction of "Tick" Wardell and his famous syncopated orchestra, whose rendering of the many song hits of the play such as "Juanita," "So Am I," "The Half of It Dearie Blues," "Fascinating Rhythm" and the theme song, "Oh, Lady, Be Good," help to make a more than enjoyable musical evening.

Seats for "Lady Be Good" will go on sale next Thursday and mail orders are now being filled.

THE PASSION PLAY FILM COMING HERE

The recent announcement that the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs would present the Passion Play at the auditorium-armory week commencing November 30 has caused many favorable comments from the clergy and civic heads of Atlanta.

This is the first time the Passion Players have permitted their sublime drama to be filmed on the exact locations at Freiburg, Baden, and with the players enacting the roles. Hitherto the camera has been denied admittance.

This production has characterizations transcending those usually found in feature productions. This is due to the sincerity of the players, who not only devote their lives to the perfection of their roles, but who in most instances have inherited the honor of such participation from a long line of forebears of equal devotion. These villagers, clock makers, wood carvers, toy makers and other artisans assume the roles for the honor.

The Passion Play affords great opportunity for expression. It is the spectacle of spectacles. Freiburg's Passion Play is the oldest that survives. As early as 1246 the authorities selected the Freiburg Passion Play for special attention. It has been moved from the plaza of the ancient cathedral to an open ampitheater accommodating 9,000 persons. That of Oberammergau is enacted in a semi-open space of similar dimensions, with a roof for both stage and the space devoted to spectators' seats.

Both institutions have steadfastly refused fabulous offers from motion picture interests to film their production, fearing that their exhibition with miscellaneous pictures would destroy their dignity and reverence. The Freiburg players finally rescinded that decision and made their own production and control the conditions under which it is shown. In the Atlanta showing, the production will have a spoken prologue and special singing accompaniment and organ music.

Dimitri Buchowetzki, now well known to the American public by his recent film productions "The Swan" and "Graustark," achieved his first fame by his skillful direction of the Freiburg Passion Play. He has been highly complimented in collecting the essentials which tell a succinct and complete story.

MIRTH AND BEAUTY AT LOEW'S GRAND

Fun and laughter are predominant features of Jack Wilson's new act "A Nonsensical Revue" which comes as the headline attraction this week on the vaudeville bill at Loew's Grand theater. Wilson long has ranked around the top in the list of comedians and this season he has a brand new act which is a riot of laughter from start to finish, according to the critics. Supporting the comedian are such well-known entertainers as Oscar Taylor, Ruth Wheeler and Willie Ward.

Throughout the entire new bill will be found acts of unusual merit. Frank Hughes and Company will appear in "Romantic Moments in Danceland." They bring their own special scenery for a beautiful dancing turn and will introduce the season's latest novelties.

Some late bright bits of musical comedy will be found in "She Cares For Me," presented by Barr, Mayo and Renn. The Skit is filled with clever lines and ludicrous situations and the trio introduce from time to time pretty, harmony singing.

Barry and Rollo, two attractive girls, whose voice blend sweetly will sing a repertoire of songs. They specialize in the prettiest of the old classics and add variety to their program by singing some of the newest topical song hits.

Les Pierrotys, fresh from European music halls, will bring something new in their offering, "Thrills and Spills." The act is presented in lively fashion, one difficult feat following another in rapid succession.

To round out the perfect program, the feature picture offering will be "Tower of Lies" with Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer.

The Limited Mail.

(Alamo No. 2 Theater.)

This week marks the twelfth anniversary of the Alamo No. 2 theater on Whitehall street and completes the longest stretch of occupancy of one location of any theater in the city. The theater is under the management of Ray R. Miller, a capable showman, and is a popular amusement place.

The original admission price when the theater first opened was 5 cents and the pictures shown were the old jerky one-reelers which were more novelty than entertainment. Contrasted with "The Limited Mail," showing this week, the improvement in dramatization, screening and presentation is most marked.

The anniversary will be celebrated with an exceptional program, souvenirs for the ladies and a general birthday atmosphere. Twelve years' continuous operation is a record to be proud of and the management of the Alamo No. 2 is to be congratulated on the showing made during that time.

"The Limited Mail," with Monte Blue and Vera Reynolds, will open the weekly program Monday, followed by "In the Name of Love," with Ricardo Cortez, and Bob Custer in "A Man of Nerve" closes the week's engagement.

SABINI PAIR HEADS KEITH'S VAUDEVILLE

Frank and Teddy Sabini, long favorites of the vaudeville boards, will be seen at Keith's Forsyth theater the first three days of this week in a brand new skit, brimming with comedy and fun, entitled "I Quit," which headlines the excellent program.

The skit "I Quit" is not new. The material for comedy is brand new, however. The title of the vehicle of Sabini has remained the same for a long period but a constant effort is being made to keep the act fresh and bright, and so "I Quit" this season is entirely different from any of the previous numbers of this popular team.

The mission of a comedian is to provoke merriment and the Sabinis are comedians in every sense of the word.

Another splendid act on the program for the first part of the week will be "Cruising—a Trip to Melodyland With Oceans of Pep," as it is billed.

Jimmy Fox with a splendid company offers "The Goat" as another attraction on the bill. Jimmy Fox is a comedian of a new type. A goat is the butt of an alibi. The fellow who stands responsible for things in which he has no responsibility. Mr. Fox makes the goat responsible for an infectious comedy. His company includes Anna Mae Hill and Waldo Edwards.

There are innumerable songs and innumerable singers, but only a few stand out in bold relief. This is the reason for the popularity of Ted Leslie, another feature of the bill. Despite the name, Ted Leslie is a girl.

The Wheeler Trio includes the program in some daring acrobatics.

A newsreel and an Aesop Fable also are features.

When someone wanted to change the name of "My Old Dutch" to "Love Me and the World Is Mine," Pat O'Malley sent a most pathetic appeal to Carl Laemmle. Its basis was the fact that he had called his dog Old Dutch and he could not see himself calling that dog "Love Me and the World Is Mine." So the title remains.

Rudolph Valentino.

Putting reverse English on the Russian.

That's what Rudolph Valentino and his director, Clarence Brown, did in making "The Eagle," Rudy's first production for United Artists corporation, coming soon to the Metropolitan theater.

Usually when one thinks of a Russian story by a native Russian author, one thinks of gloom with compound interest. Now "The Eagle" was adapted from a story by Alexander Pushkin, "the Shakespeare of Russia," but there isn't any depression in it.

On the contrary, there is considerable hilarity, mirth and other such jovial qualities. Hans Kraby, who has adapted most of the Lubitsch comedies, wrote the scenario of "The Eagle," and his fine hand may be detected in the light treatment. The picture may be described as a romantic comedy drama.

Valentino's role is therefore quite different from any which he has previously essayed. It also gives him an opportunity for great versatility, inasmuch as he will appear in three different guises. He is seen first as a dashing Cossack officer, later as a Tartar bandit, and for a while he masquerades as a French tutor.

The Cameo.

(Constance Talmadge.)

Constance Talmadge in "Her Night of Romance" is the new Cameo's attraction for Armistice day and the Thursday following. This picture is said to be the funniest picture that the bright and breezy Connie has ever made. It shows her in a love tangle with an English lord as a result of her efforts to dodge fortune hunters. Ronald Colman is her leading man, and it is on Ronald and Constance that Cupid does his best. It is Cupid's best work and Constance lest him have his own way all through it.

"Are Parents People?" the opening feature for the week, has to do with the trials of a young girl whose parents are suffering from a case of incompatibility. They are constantly quarreling about trifles and finally separate. How they are reconciled when their daughter gives them a "mutual worry"—making them believe that she is infatuated with a long-haired movie sheik—puts this picture a hop, skip and a jump ahead of anything of its kind. Betty Bronson, the "Peter Pan Girl," Adolphe Menjou and Florence Vidor are featured in the production.

An ocean liner blown up for a single moving picture thrill! Such was the intrepid producer's action for one scene in "The Half-Way Girl," which is the Friday and Saturday picture for the Cameo. Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes are featured.

EASTERN CAPITAL MOVING TO SOUTH

Evidence of the continued movement of eastern capital into the south is to be found on every hand, it is pointed out here by business experts.

"The southward movement of eastern capital, shown in a number of mill constructions and investments, is a very clear indication of the growing recognition of the opportunities of the south for industrial development," said Frank Hempstead, well-known business expert of Atlanta.

The southern investment of New England capital, according to Mr. Hempstead, will in the future mean the building of more new mills in the south than it means today. In the last few years, he sohws, the textile industry has had rapid expansion.

"The south is growing more rapidly than some of us realize," said Mr. Hempstead, who returned recently from a business trip which took in him sections of the south.

Mr. Hempstead, who maintains offices in Atlanta, Washington, D. C., and Miami, Fla., supervises the audits of many large concerns and he said a wave of prosperity undoubtedly had struck the whole south.

Another set of tax complexities has been added to those that seem to be inevitable in the administration of the income tax with its endless regulations, changing and conflicting interpretations, Mr. Hempstead said.

"In addition to their income tax, corporations are required to pay the federal government a capital stock tax," said Mr. Hempstead. "It was instituted as a special source of war expense income and is denominated as excise tax, but is actually a property tax on the entire assets of a corporation.

"Corporations have followed different methods in figuring this tax, and there are as many as 20,000 disputed revisions yearly. It is understood that the capital stock tax section is now planning to re-examine tax returns for past years with a view to an impartial readjustment according to common rule.

The capital stock tax, figures show, yields the government $80,000,000 a year. The prospect is that the tax will be greatly reduced at the next session of congress.

MURPHY DOOR BED COMPANY REMOVES TO NEW LOCATION

Expansion of its business requiring additional space and more satisfactory location occasioned announcement by the Murphy Door Bed company of the removal of its office and display rooms on November 1 from the Peachtree Arcade building to larger quarters at 33 Luckie street. The new location, on the street level, offers better possibilities of displaying properly the various installations of Murphy In-A-Door beds, white enameled steel kitchens, cabinets, ironing boards and other space and labor-saving devices manufactured for installaton in apartments and residences.

Established in Atlanta 11 years ago when construction work in the south was nothing as compared to the present program, the Murphy Door Bed company laid its foundation on sound business principles, and since that time has aided in every way to improve and develop living conditions. Its efforts have been responsible, to a large extent, for many of the buildings erected in southern cities which have helped to avert a more serious housing shortage than has been felt. Even during the world war and its accompanying difficulties, this company never lost faith in Atlanta and south and continued with its work.

Its rapid and healthy growth has been attributed to its policy of absolutely guaranteeing its products and to the service rendered to prospective customers through its technical service department, which acts as a clearing house for building ideas gathered from the entire country. Its business brings the representative of the Murphy Door Bed company into intimate touch with hotels, apartments and residences, and the information gathered in this manner by the various offices is accumulated and passed on to applicants interested in building. From one small office in Atlanta 11 years ago, this company has not only found it necessary to expand its present quarters in Atlanta but has opened four branch offices which are directly controlled from Atlanta.

Figures Prove This City Logical Trading Center

There is little need of restating the fact that Atlanta is a logical trading center—for that fact has built the city.

Radiating like the spokes of a great wheel, railroads and highways run out of Atlanta to the far corners of the country—and the near ones. At the ends of these railways and highways, and along them, are great cities and little ones. These cities eat, dress, build homes, and do many other things that call for buying activities with steady regularity.

Around Atlanta, where they were placed by generous Nature, lie untold resources of things from which these other cities that the cities eat, wear, build houses out of and otherwise use, come or are made.

Atlanta also is the center of what probably is the richest, yet the most undeveloped part of the United States—an empire in the making if taken alone. It lies in easy reach of every part of this great region and from it every one of those parts can be reached quicker than from any one other place.

This wonderful region of the southland has a great semi-circle of growing ports, several of which are or are becoming factors in the commerce of the world. Within this semi-circle, at the exact center almost, lies Atlanta—within a day's run of any of these ports.

Because of these things numbers of men of vision have built factories in Atlanta from which products go along the highways and railroads and through the ports to the south, the nation and the world. Other men of vision came from every part of the country and established distributing offices and big warehouses in the city from which they supply the south and nations to the south with their goods. As a consequence almost anything can be bought in Atlanta. The city has become one of the great markets of the nation.

Therefore the merchants of the south have learned to come to Atlanta for what they want and have their wants filled. Around the factories and the distributing offices and warehouses there have grown up wholesale businesses and jobbing concerns, brokers, supply men and others who supply the needs of the small businesses.

Whether a man runs a department store or a country store of the crossroads variety, whether he is building a chicken coop or a skyscraper, whether he is operating a railroad or a peanut roaster, he can buy in Atlanta to advantage.

And every year thousands do flock to the city to do their buying—merchants, builders, operators, farmers, citizens of smaller communities, and others. Other thousands buy from the city by mail and by wire.

To the individual, the retail buyer, Atlanta offers much indeed. Great shops and small shops offer goods brought from the far corners of the earth to supply the needs of the city and its customers. Tradesmen and craftsmen ply their trades of various kinds. Designers and artists offer the products of their art. Here again there are few things indeed that one cannot find in Atlanta.

So has grown up one of the great markets of the country—are you making the use of it that you might do?

Atlanta Merchant Breaks Former Records for Sales

Following an announcement in The Constitution recently of his plan of selling women's and children's cloaks, coats and dresses, Jacob Segalowitz, of 90 South Pryor street, declares his business has increased at a most splendid rate, and that many new accounts have been added to those whose names were already on his books.

The plan by which Mr. Segalowitz sells his merchandise is new in the south, and it is said to furnish a most convenient and advantageous way for southern merchants to secure goods at New York prices, and without having to make the expensive trip to the metropolis to purchase these articles.

Representing 15 leading metropolitan manufacturers of ladies' coats and dresses and childrens and misses' cats, Mr. Segalowitz maintains what is known as a "Rack House," in which he carries large stocks of the above goods, from which visiting merchants are permitted to select coats and dresses in whatever size lots they may desire.

"The popularity of my place," said Mr. Segalowitz, "which has been steadily increasing since a story appeared in The Constitution descriptive of my business, is a sure indication that the plan by which I sell is looked upon as convenient and highly advantageous to the merchants of Atlanta and surrounding territory. In an effort to extend the business over the south I have I. Scheuer on the road, making Macon, Americus and other cities of that size, from which he has sent in some nice orders. In addition to the business that has developed by Mr. Scheuer's efforts, the patronage of the merchants in Atlanta and other cities is also rapidly increasing. It is really difficult to maintain a sufficient amount of merchandise on hand to supply the growing trade."

Mr. Segalowitz recently made a trip to New York to select goods from several of the 15 or more manufacturing concerns he represents. He shipped 1,500 coats of various styles. These, he declared, reached Atlanta on last Monday morning and were taken at once, practically by the merchants of this section. He then said that he ordered out a thousand more coats by wire, which will not supply the present demand, making it necessary to wire an order for an additional 400 coats and garments.

"The fact that I am merely representing, as sales agent, 15 New York manufacturers of coats and dresses," said the merchant, "gives me the opportunity to allow the merchants of small towns and cities in the southeast to purchase whatever they may want in these lines without making a trip to New York or having to pay the carriage charges on the goods. And the best part is that I do not charge any more than they would have to pay at the New York market for these garments. The time saved them by my plan is also a considerable item.

"This rack house, carrying all the latest styles, made into special models for my business, is the only one of its kind in the southeast, there being only one south of Baltimore in addition to the local store," said the merchant.

The rapidity with which the coats and dresses have been sold by the Atlanta house since the publication of an announcement in The Constitution last Sunday indicates to Mr. Segalowitz the power of publicity as well as the popularity of his new plan of selling his wares to the merchants of the southeast.

"I am highly pleased over the splendid business that has developed here since I located in Atlanta, and I attribute much of my success to the publicity in The Constitution."

CONTRACTOR SEES BOO MFOR SOUTH

The plastering of interiors has become an art demanding the highest skill for good work, and the stucco house's advent into its present great popularity has increased demands upon the stucco worker. In Atlanta there is a firm which has realized these two things and has prepared itself to meet them, P. L. Gomez & Company, at 509-10 Bona Allen building. This firm has a branch office in Miami and handles contracts for plastering and stucco work all over the south.

Such a firm is in constant contact with building activities and is in a good position to judge business conditions over the south. P. L. Gomez, head of the farm, said:

"Business is growing better and better, in my opinion. I think it took a sudden jump late in August and has been steadily improving ever since. We have been kept very busy all fall.

"I look for big things to happen in the south within the near future—they are already starting. With our people and our resources, they simply can't stop the south—it is going to be the greatest part of the United States before many years pass."

ENGRAVING FIRM PREPARING FOR CHRISTMAS RUSH

On the ground floor of the Peachtree arcade at No. 34 is the L. D. Specht Engraving company, of which L. D. Specht is the head. Mr. Specht is an exceptional engraver himself and his shop is kept busy producing high-grade wedding invitations, visiting cards, monogrammed stationery, Christmas cards, steel engraved letter heads and the like.

Mr. Specht reports that because of the increased business his company is rapidly being crowded out of its present quarters, and that he has found it advisable to prepare himself to handle three times the amount of business this year as he did last. Certain equipment and features of handling the work will make it possible for this volume to be handled in the same time as one-third of the same volume was last year.

One of the things that is keeping the engravers busy these days is a special assortment of Christmas cards that sell for a dollar, which are being turned out in great numbers to meet a very active demand.

This firm does business all over the southeast, and it reports a very healthy and encouraging growth.

In its shop are found the same processes as are used in making money—for, after all, Mr. Specht said, there is little difference between your engraved letter head and a dollar bill except in buying power.

In its service are a group of skilled craftsmen who are thoroughly versed in their work and equipped to produce high quality engraving of all kinds.

"We are now busy taking Christmas orders," said M. Specht. "Our business is exceptionally heavy this year and we have had to increase facilities to handle it. We are doing quite a bit of business with business firms who are learning the value of sending out engraved Christmas greetings to their customers. We stop taking orders on December 15 in order to concentrate upon filling every order before Christmas."

SOUTH WEARING BOOM FOR SOUTH

Whatever the men may be doing, the women of the south are not going hatless—at least that is indicated by what Meyer Regenstein, of J. Regenstein Company, says. And wherever you may be in the sunny south, when you see a damsel tripping gaily down the street with her pretty head adorned with an exceptionally attractive hat, think of Atlanta, for that hat may have come from Atlanta. Regenstein supplies the south.

And the south is wearing hats, more and more hats, all kinds of hats, for Regenstein's is rushed these days. Demand has increased so much that the firm has made a quarter again as many hats. In other words it has increased its output twenty-five per cent without catching up with sales. To do this it has added 33 new trimmers who are kept busy turning out Regenstyle pattern hats—the pattern hat that has made Regenstein's famous among the millinery establishments and places where women buy hats in the south.

It is interesting to note what the women of the south are wearing, and Mr. Regenstein can tell you. The greatest demand at present is for metal, and metal and satin combinations, black satin, both small and medium, with ornaments or metal trimmings. In New York faille silks are the thing and are going strong. On the southern market, they follow closely on the heels of satin in demand and popularity.

There is quite a demand for large Neapolitan straws for tropical wear. Tourist centers of the state are asking for fur felts in delicate pastel shades trimmed with large silk and metal flowers, and asking for them in large quantities. There is fair demand for these in other sections.

The Regenstein representatives are now out in their territories circulating among the trade showing an advance spring line of fabrics, also some straw ready-to-wears. And they report good business along with the many orders they are sending in.

RAILWAYS INDEX TO U. S. PROSPERITY

When the product of the field, forest, mine and factory is being moved about over the country in greater quantity and at a more rapid rate than ever before in the nation's history, business experts asserted here today there is only one deduction to be drawn, which is that commerce and industry are more active than ever before.

If anyone is inclined to believe the nation's business is somewhat stagnant, business men here point out, let him consult the railroad statistics. It was shown that more cars were loaded with revenue-producing freight in one week within the last month than ever before during any one week on record.

"This high weekly record is only a part of the unusually heavy car loadings for the whole year thus far," said a local railroad man. "Every month's loadings this year have surpassed those of the same month of last year."

This freight in raw materials going from the field, the forest and the mine into the markets and to manufactories; manufactured products going from factory to wholesale and retail mercantile centers—it is conclusive proof, Atlanta business man say, that the people of America are producing more, manufacturing more, buying more.

It means, business men here declare, a high state of activity in all commercial circles, and since transportation is to some extent anticipative, it is claimed, it would indicate a very general feeling that the coming fall is to see a very prosperous condition of business.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

VOL. LVIII., No. 148. ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 8, 1925.

Beautiful Bride, December Bride-Elect and College Belle

The lovely figure at the left is Miss Natalie deGolian, attractive and popular school girl daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. deGolian of the Howell Mill road. Miss deGolian is a student at the Georgetown Visitation Convent, Washington, D. C. She will spend the Thanksgiving holidays in New York as the guest of Miss Rosalind Gunby, where with her hostess, she will be a feted guest at the brilliant social functions given in the Metropolis at this season of the year. The beautiful bride standing in the center is Mrs. Charles Mills Maclean, of Savannah, who before her marriage Wednesday evening was Miss Margaret Massengale, popular Atlanta society girl. Mrs. Maclean is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. St. Elmo Massengale of this city and her wedding was a brilliant social affair, taking place at St. Philip's cathedral followed by an elaborate reception at the Piedmont Driving club. Miss Pauline Ware, charming member of Atlanta's society contingent is seen on the right. The engagement of Miss Ware is announced today to Bernard Neal, by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Abert Britton Ware, the marriage of this popular couple to be an outstanding social event of December 16. Photograph of Miss deGolian by McCrary and Co., of Mrs. Maclean by Thurston Hatcher, of Miss Ware by Wesley Hirshburg.

Miss Pauline Ware To Wed Bernard Neal in December

In the announcement made today by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Britton Ware of the engagement of their daughter, Pauline Ross, to Bernard Neeson Neal, social importance is attached and centers the interest of a wide circle of friends.

Miss Ware and Mr. Neal are popular members of the city's younger social contingent and are representatives of distinguished pioneer southern families.

The parents of the lovely young bride-elect are prominently identified with the civic and social life of the city, her mother having been before her marriage, Miss Mary Ella Frazer, daughter of the late Judge and Mrs. Thomas L. Frazer. The maternal grandmother of the bride-elect was formerly Miss Ella Ross, member of eminent Alabama family by that name. Thomas Frazer, prominent and popular Atlantan is an uncle of the attractive bride-elect.

Miss Ware's paternal grandparents, the late Britton M. Ware and Mrs. Pauline Ingram Ware were from Russell county, Alabama, where they were beloved pioneer citizens.

The bride-elect is a young woman of extreme beauty and is endowed with many social graces. Following her graduation from the National Cathedral, in Washington, D. C., she enjoyed the advantages of foreign travel and study and is recognized as one of the most cultured members of Atlanta society. Miss Ware was a favorite member of the 1922-23 Debutante club and since her formal presentation to Atlanta society has been a popular and admired figure attending the numerous brilliant social functions.

Mr. Neal is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lovic Gladstone Neal, who are both members of esteemed Georgia families. Mrs. Neal was before her marriage, Miss Eva Neeson, daughter of Dr. Neeson, of Warrenton, Ga., and Mr. Neal is son of Judge James B. Neal, of Thomasville, Ga.

The groom-to-be is a brother of Miss Gladys Neal and Earl Neal.

Mr. Neal attended the Atlanta Boys' High school, graduating from the University of Georgia in 1916, where he was a popular member of the "G" club and the Kappa Sigma fraternity. He enlisted in the signal corps during the world war and served as second lieutenant on the Mexican border.

Mr. Neal is engaged in cotton seed products. He is a member of the Capital City and Atlanta Athletic clubs.

The marriage of Miss Ware and Mr. Neal will be an outstanding social event of December 16, taking place at the St. Mark Methodist church.

Football Dance Is Announced.

Announcement is made today by the management of the Atlanta Biltmore hotel of a special dance Saturday evening, November 14, from 8 until 12 o'clock in the ballroom of the hotel. Honor guests of the occasion being members of the University of Georgia football team and out-of-town guests who will be in the city to attend the Tech-Georgia game at Grant field in the afternoon.

There will be the regular Wednesday evening dinner-dance, November 25 in the ballroom of the hotel to be followed Thursday evening by an elaborate Thanksgiving dinner-dance also in the ballroom. This affair will be one of the largest and most enjoyable events of the fall, the guests to include many prominent members of Atlanta society, the younger set, college contingent and out-of-town visitors who will be in the city to witness the annual football classic between Georgia Tech and Auburn. This game always proves the most popular of the season and football fans from all parts of the state will be guests in the city.

Kappa Sigma Fraternity Dance.

The Kappa Sigma fraternity of Georgia Tech will entertain at a dance at its chapter house Saturday evening, November 14, at 9 o'clock instead of a tea-dance as previously announced.

Glory of Georgia Splendor of Tech Reflected in Game

A colorful event of social importance to the college crowds particularly is promised by the National Georgia Tech Alumni association on the day of its annual home-coming, Saturday, November 14.

The entire ballroom of the Biltmore hotel has been engaged for the home-coming luncheon at 12 noon which ushers in the social and athletic functions. After the luncheon, the alumni, their families and friends will attend the Georgia and Tech game in a body.

Following the game, all of the fraternity houses will keep open house for their out-of-town visitors. Many of the chapters will have dances and receptions.

The class of 1911 as a whole, which is having its 1925 reunion, will attend the tea-dance at the Biltmore hotel on the evening of the game. Many of the older and younger alumni who are coming in from all parts of the United States have made reservations for all of these social affairs. They have also been recipients of invitations to the club dances which are shaping their social functions to reflect the "glory of Georgia and the splendor of Tech." College colors, streamers and flowers will be the order of the day.

The National Alumni association at Tech chooses a day of each year during the football season for its annual home-coming in compliment to its rival for the occasion. Vanderbilt was so honored last year, but Georgia Tech honors Georgia this year with the resumption of their football relations.

Officers of the National Georgia Tech Alumni association are: George W. McCarty, 1908, president; Charles LeBey, 1922, second vice president; Ed C. Liddell, 1922, treasurer; Jack A. Sweet, 1907, vice president; C. D. Thiesen, 1910, secretary and director Greater Tech. Reservations and tickets for all the social affairs are being made with the secretary.

Mrs. Andrew Hero and Mrs. William H. Patterson will pour coffee.

Former Atlantans Sail for Italy.

Baron and Baroness Marcus Rosenkrantz sailed yesterday from New York for Europe on the steamer Duilo, and will spend the winter in Italy.

They spent the gay fall season at Hot Springs, Va., and were among the prominent hosts and hostesses at this famous resort. A charming photograph of Baroness Rosenkrantz appeared recently in the New York Sun. They were former residents of Atlanta.

Gen. and Mrs. Hagood To Be Honored At Reception

The officers and ladies of the regular army community in the vicinity of Atlanta, including the fourth corps area headquarters, Fort McPherson, fourth coast artillery district and the officers on duty in and around Atlanta, will give a reception for Major General and Mrs. Johnson Hagood at Fort McPherson, Ga., on Wednesday evening, November 18.

This event will be one of the most brilliant affairs given in the history of Atlanta's army and civilian social life and there will be distinguished representation from circles of society.

Miss Louise Phinizy To Represent Georgia.

Miss Louise Calhoun Phinizy, of Athens, who bears the name of her aunt, Mrs. A. W. Calhoun, of Atlanta, is in Waco, Texas, where she will represent Georgia at the Cotton Palace exposition which is an annual event every November.

Miss Phinizy is visiting Miss Ruth McLendon, who is queen of the carnival, and will be a guest at the brilliant ball at which time the king and queen will be crowned. Miss Phinizy is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Billups Phinizy, of Athens, and a sister of Mrs. Hughes Spalding, Mrs. Malcolm Fortson, of Atlanta; Mrs. J. M. Billing, of Athens, and Mrs. LeRoy Percy, of Birmingham. She finished her education at Lucy Cobb institute, afterward going to Miss Finch's school in New York, and has traveled extensively in this country and Europe. She has been the recipient of a great deal of attention, and possesses great beauty and charm. Miss Phinizy is the representative of one of the most prominent and distinguished families in the state.

Symphony Concert Is On Sunday's Calendar

As shadows lengthen and fall days deepen into winter, society turns from a frivolous mood to things of a more serious vein, cultural and educational affairs centering the interest of the hour.

Atlanta points with pardonable pride to the opening of the third season of the symphony orchestra which will take place at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the Grand theater. Music lovers from all over the south will gather to enjoy this musical treat, the first of the series of concerts which will continue throughout the winter months.

Will Occupy Boxes.

Prominent Atlantans will occupy the boxes at the initial concert this afternoon. Governor and Mrs. Clifford Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell and Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Pegram will share a box for the season. Ex-Governor and Mrs. John M. Slaton will have with them Mrs. Frank Hawkins, Mrs. John E. Murphy, Mrs. Francis C. Miss Barton Weds Mr. Sanford At Lovely Home Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Leila Barton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Barton, to Harold Woodliff Sanford, which was solemnized Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents in West End, was characterized by great beauty.

Dr. Warren Mosby Seay performed the impressive ceremony in the presence of a large assemblage of friends and relatives.

Just before the entrance of the bridal party Miss Lillian Smith sang "Because" and "I Love You Truly," accompanied at the piano by Miss Ellen Kener.

Lovely Decorations.

The entire home was beautifully decorated with quantities of palms, smilax and baskets of pink roses and chrysanthemums. The chandeliers and doorways were gracefully entwined with ropes of southern smilax. Tall floor baskets filled with lovely chrysanthemums and feathery fern were arranged in the corner of the rooms. To the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin the bridal party descended the stairway, which was entwined with smilax and proceeded through an aisle formed of pedestal baskets overflowing with white chrysanthemums and connected with white silk tulle. The ceremony took place in the living room before an improvised altar in front of a large fireplace banked with palms and ferns. On either side of the altar were pedestal baskets of white chrysanthemums and tall cathedral candelabra burning white tapers.

First came the bridesmaids, who entered alone. They were Miss Ruth Barton, younger sister of the bride, wearing green georgette; Mrs. Luther C. Rollins, of Siler City, N. C., in lavender georgette, and Mrs. James Weems in pink georgette. The gowns were fashioned alike over satin, the same shade as the gowns, made with tight waist and full circular skirts, with lace godets. They carried arm bouquets of pink chrysanthemums. Next came the matron of honor, Mrs. Jess Wilhoit, another sister of the bride. Her gown was of orchid georgette over sunset-colored satin and beaded in rhinestones and crystals. She carried a large bouquet of yellow chrysanthemums.

Miss Margaret Barton was her sister's maid of honor and wore a lovely gown of turquoise blue georgette over satin of the same shade and beaded in rhinestones. She carried a beautiful bouquet of yellow chrysanthemums. All of the attendants wore white satin slippers and hose to match.

Next to enter was the flower girl, little Miss Rosemary Murphy. She wore a dainty frock of pink georgette with lace over a changeable taffeta slip. On her arm she carried a white cone-shaped basket filled with pink rosebuds.

Lovely Bride.

The bride entered with her father, who gave her in marriage and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Harry C. Richardson. The bride was a picture of loveliness in her wedding gown of white satin. Godets of lace trimmed the full circular skirt and the waist was made basque effect with a yoke of georgette underneath which showed a band of silver lace. Dainty seed pearls outlined the godets, armholes and neckline of the gown. A court train beaded with seed pearls in bowknot design added to the beauty of the costume. Her veil of misty silk tulle was held to her hair by a band of real lace with clusters of orange blossoms over each ear. The veil fell the entire length of the train and was caught at intervals with dainty sprays of orange blossoms. She wore white satin slippers with rhinestone buckles. She carried a gorgeous shower bouquet of brides' roses and valley lilies.

Reception Follows.

The bride's parents entertained at a reception following the ceremony. The bride's table was covered with a handsome lace cloth and had as its central decoration a spraying fountain. Silver candlesticks holding white candles interspersed with silver bonbons filled with pink and green mints added to the beautiful decorations. The three-tiered wedding cake was embossed with valley lilies and was topped with a miniature bride and groom.

Assisting in entertaining were Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Sanford, the groom's parents; Miss Leila McCarley, the bride's aunt; Mrs. Royal C. Camp and Mrs. Clarence C. Crocker, sisters of the bride. Miss Sara and Miss Berta Sanford served punch. Mrs. Warren Booth kept the bride's book.

The bride's mother, Mrs. Barton, wore a handsome gown of fuchsia cut velvet and a corsage of Ophelia roses and swainsona.

The groom's mother wore blue georgette beaded in cut-steel beads and wore a corsage of pink roses. Miss McCarley wore a gown of blue georgette with godets of lace and a shoulder corsage of rosebuds.

Mrs. Camp wore apple-green georgette with Mechlin lace. Mrs. Crocker wore blue georgette over flesh satin.

Mr. and Mrs. Sanford left for a wedding trip to Signal Mountain, Tennessee.

The bride wore a traveling dress of cocoa crepe satin and a hat of gold tissue. A stone marten choker completed her costume.

Mrs. Sanford is the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Barton. She received her education at Girls' High school from where she was graduated in 1920.

Mr. Sanford is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Sanford. He attended Tech High school and later attended the University of Georgia, where he was a member of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity. He is now connected with the Atlanta and Lowry National bank.

Miss Daisy White Weds J. B. Roan At Church Ceremony

Centering the cordial interest of friends and relatives throughout the state was the marriage of Miss Daisy Narcissus White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Napoleon Bonaparte White, of Marietta, to John Benjamin Roan, of Atlanta, which was solemnized on Tuesday morning, October 27, at 7 o'clock, at the First Methodist church in Marietta. Rev. R. C. Cleckler, pastor of the church, performed the impressive ring ceremony in the presence of a large assemblage of friends and relatives.

Ferns and vines banked the altar and choir loft which formed a background for the bridal party. Cathedral candlesticks held white tapers. The center of the choir loft was starred by a French basket tied with white tulle, and filled with white blossoms. On each side of the altar were large baskets filled with mammoth white chrysanthemums, while the chancel rail was entwined with graceful vines and outlined with burning tapers. Preceding the ceremony Miss Elizabeth Northcutt sang "I Love You Truly," accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Moore, who played the wedding march for the entrance of the bridal couple and "To a Wild Rose," during the ceremony.

The bride and groom approached the altar together. The bride was beautifully attired in a modish gown of golden brown crepe satin trimmed in a harmonous shade of tan. The waist was fashioned with a vest effect of tan, and the belt was caught in front with a dark pearl buckle. The front of the fashionable skirt had an apron effect with inverted plaits under which was displayed a slip of tan crepe. From the neck line two large crepe folds extended down the back, ending in plaits similar to those in front. Her hat was a brown satin with trimmings of gold metal cloth and braid. And her costume accessories were of a lighter shade of brown. With this costume she wore a corsage of pink rose buds and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Wardlaw Honors Wedding Party.

A pretty affair of Thursday evening was the bridge-supper given by Mrs. James L. Wardlaw at her home, 2226 North Boulevard in honor of Miss Corinne Moore and Alfred Lyde Brady, whose marriage will be a social event of this month.

An array of fall flowers were used throughout the home. Yellow and white was the color scheme.

Miss Moore was lovely in orchid chiffon. Mrs. Wardlaw was a charming figure in chiffon over rose satin.

Mrs. V. D. Smith, who assisted in entertaining wore a pretty gown of lipstick red.

The honoree was presented a pillow of rose and gold taffeta. Top score prizes were bridge novelties and handkerchiefs; consolation was gilt-edge cards.

Supper was served at the individual tables. A miniature bride marked the bride-elect's place.

The guests were: Miss Corinne Moore, Miss Stella Moore, Miss Mattie Templemans, Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Kimberly, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Harry J. Woodard and Alfred Lyde Brady, Otto Heard, Mr. Tidwell and Mr. and Mrs. Wardlaw.

Mrs. Armor Weds Paul R. Yopp.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Mrs. Beaulah Wainwright Armor and Paul R. Yopp, of Atlanta which took place Saturday, October 24, at high noon at the home of Mr. Mrs. Frank Jeter in Cameron Park. Dr. W. McC. White, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Raleigh, performed the ceremony.

The bride wore a traveling ensemble suit of blue with grey fox trimmings and accessories to match, and a corsage of Killarney roses.

Mr. and Mrs. Yopp are at home in Atlanta.

Bird-Chapman Wedding Plans Are Announced

Of interest to a wide circle of friends throughout the south is the announcement of the wedding plans of Miss Mary Bessie Bird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Frank Bird, and Dr. Will Stewart Chapman, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Chapman, of Grove Hill, Ala.

The wedding will take place at high noon, November 17, at the Kirkwood Baptist church. The Rev. O. V. Calhoun, uncle of the groom, of Selma, Ala., will perform the ceremony.

The bride will be given in marriage by her father, W. F. Bird. Miss Bird will have as her maid of honor her sister, Miss Trez Bird. Mrs. Collins Bird will act as matron of honor. Miss Minnie Bird, sister of the bride, will be the bridesmaid.

Dr. Chapman will have as his best man Dr. W. C. Parsons, of Birmingham, Ala. The groomsmen will be Dr. Joe Parsons, of Huntsville, Ala., and Collins Bird.

Mrs. H. B. Fitzgerald and Mrs. C. L. Bellingrath will render the musical program. Mrs. C. W. Sullivan will keep the bride's book.

Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party and immediate families will assemble at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Bird on Hardendorf avenue for a wedding breakfast, later the bride and groom will leave for a wedding trip. Upon their return they will be at home in Birmingham, Ala.

W. B. A. Officers To Be Honored.

Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock Mrs. Richard W. Starke will entertain the officers of the W. B. A. at her home, 46 Dunwoody. Following a short business session a social hour will be enjoyed.

SYMPHONY CONCERT ON CALENDAR

Margaret Mackall, of Washington, D. C. Miss Hawkins will keep open house this afternoon in compliment to her visitors and they will be feted throughout the next two weeks at a round of lovely parties.

Miss Mary Mack, of Thomasville, who has a host of friends in the city made on former visits, will arrive to spend next week-end with Miss Margaret Elder at her home on Ponce de Leon avenue.

Mrs. Edward G. Hitt, of Chicago, is receiving a cordial welcome in the city as the guest of her father, William F. Slaton, at his home on Myrtle street.

Chi Phi Dinner.

The Atlanta alumni of the Chi Phi fraternity will give an elaborate dinner-dance at the Piedmont Driving club Friday evening, inviting several hundred members of society to be their guests. All Chi Phis who are in town for the Tech-Georgia football game will be honor guests of the occasion.

A wedding of much interest which will take place during the week is that of Miss Mary Thornton and Earl Sanders, which will be solemnized at 4:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Eva L. Thornton, in College Park.

An out-of-town wedding in which Atlantans claim an unusual share of interest is that of Miss Elaine Sims, of Valdosta, to Edmund Hurt, of Atlanta, which will take place at 9 o'clock Thursday evening at the First Baptists church in Valdosta.

Atlantans, old and young alike, will hie themselves forth to Grant field on Saturday afternoon to witness the clash between the Golden Tornado of Tech and the Bulldogs of Georgia university; for every Atlanta family, almost with no exception, has been represented by father, brother or son at one of these two outstanding colleges, and interest is renewed with high enthusiasm in this, the first football game between the two teams for several seasons.

The game will also be the occasion of a home-coming of former Tech students and social gatherings galore will feature the program throughout the week-end.

Harvest Festival Will Be Staged This Week.

The Harvest festival will be opened with the annual parish supper, by the members of the Immaculate Conception church, corner of Central avenue and Hunter street. The festival will be held in the Sunday school hall of the church, beginning with the supper on Tuesday, November 10, and continuing through Saturday evening, November 14. Each day from 12 to 2:30 p. m. lunches will be served.

Various booths will be sponsored by the ladies of the church, including the parish booth, radio and electric booth, apron booth and a "hot dog" and soft drink stand. The young ladies of the I. C. club will have charge of a country store, Chrismas card booth and miscellaneous and toy booth. A committee from the I. C. club will also have charge of "stunts" which will furnish novel entertainment each night of the festival.

The Knights of Columbus will be in charge of a booth where various attractive articles will be obtainable. All friends of the knights are especially invited to patronize this booth.

Each day during the festival will have its special feature. Tuesday, opening day will be featured by the special supper, and for entertainment, the services of a popular Atlanta orchestra have been secured, and they will play popular song hits during the evening.

Wednesday has been set aside as K. of C. day. Thursday is to be "home-coming" day, when all the old members and friends of the parish are urged to attend. Friday is children's day and will be featured by a children's party during the afternoon from 3 to 6 p. m., and Saturday is closing day.

This festival will present the opportunity for members of the parish and their friends to enjoy a week of pleasurable entertainment as well as giving them the chance to do their Christmas shopping early. Many lovely donations including fancy work, aprons, toys and other articles, just suited for the Christmas gift, may be had at popular prices, and it is urged that everyone take advantage of this opportunity.

Atlanta Musicians Are Starred In Music Club's Cultural Program

On Wednesday morning, November 8, at the Atlanta Woman's Club auditorium the program presented by the Atlanta Music club was of genuine interest and artistic merit. The artists were Mrs. William F. Shallenberger, contralto, and Jan Rubini, violinist.

Mrs. Shallenberger in two groups of old French songs in costume, captivated her audience with her beautiful voice, her excellent diction, her naive interpretations, her suave manner, her altogether musical understanding and effective presence. She was sympathetically supported in this artistic "tout ensemble" by Miss Ethel Beyer as accompanist.

Mr. Rubini, a newcomer to Atlanta and musical director of the Howard theater, made his first appearance before a capacity audience. His offerings were three groups of violin numbers with Mrs. Charles Chalmers at the piano. Their rendition of the Second Concerto in D minor by Wienawski is an outstanding memory.

Mr. Rubini began the program with three numbers by Sarasate, Wieniawski and Tartini-Kreisler. These were distinguished by clear, resonant quality of tone and artistic interpretation. The rendition of the Wieniawski concerto displayed deep musical feeling and appreciation on the part of both Mr. Rubini and Mrs. Chalmers.

His last group of five numbers by Drdla, Granadas-Kreisler and Vieuxtemps included also a valse caprice, his own composition. This lilting, swinging, capricious little waltz was all too ephemeral for the delight of the audience. Mr. Rubini's technique and tone were more than equal to all demands made by such a varied program. He established his atmosphere with precision and without affection or mannerism.

Mrs. Cliff Hatcher, the president of the Atlanta Music club, is to be congratulated on the artistic success of the three programs presented by the club this season. The next on in the series of 16 morning musicals to be given, will be a lecture-recital by Miss Madeline Keipp on "The Art Song," with Madame Louise Varkonyi, soprano, of Budapest, Hungary, as the assisting artist. This will take place on November 18 at 11 o'clock in the morning in the auditorium of the Atlanta Woman's club at 946 Peachtree street.

Miss Edna Adams Weds Mr. Sikes.

A wedding of great interest was that of Miss Edna Adams to John Toombs Sikes, of Atlanta, which took place October 31, at the beautiful country home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Adams, of Riverdale, Ga. Rev F. Bourn, of Atlanta, officiated. The bride and groom stood before an improvised altar of autumn leaves with baskets of chrysanthemums. On each side of the altar were candelabra holding white tapers.

Preceding the ceremony music was rendered by Mrs. R. L. Lasseter.

The bride wore a beautiful gown of tan crepe-back satin trimmed in fur, a picture hat of brown velvet and gold lace brocade and an artistic corsage of bride's roses and lilies of the valley completed her costume.

Presbyterian Woman's Auxiliary Bazaar.

The woman's auxiliary of the Capitol View Presbyterian church will hold a bazaar at the church Friday afternoon and evening, December 4. Fancy articles, aprons, children's clothing, home-made cake and candy, miscellaneous articles and real Christmas dolls will be for sale.

Light refreshments will be sold during the afternoon. At 6 o'clock a chicken supper will be served.

The public is cordially invited. Proceeds for benefit of manse fund.

Lovely October Bride

Mrs. R. F. Williamson, attractive fall bride, who before her marriage on October 6 was Miss Berniece Helen Stephens.

Miss Kem Ruth Evatt Weds J. A. Taylor.

The marriage of Miss Kem Ruth Evatt and James Alson Taylor was very quietly solemnized in the pastor's study at the First Baptist church, Chattanooga, Tenn., at 4:30 o'clock, Saturday, October 31.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Wiley P. Evatt, of St. Elmo, Tenn. She received her education in the Chattanooga schools and for several years has been prominent in the social and business world. She is a young lady of charming personality and has a host of friends in Chattanooga.

The groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse C. Taylor, of Ball Ground, Ga., and was educated at Rhinehardt college and the University of Georgia. During the world war he served with distinction in the naval air service. He is now holding a responsible position with the Western Electric company of Birmingham.

Immediately after the ceremony they left for an extended trip and on their return will reside in Birmingham.

The out-of-town guests for the wedding were Miss Lena Taylor, Mr. Clark and John Bob Taylor, of Ball Ground, Ga.; Miss Jo-Ella Taylor, of Charlotte, N. C.; Miss Emily L. Taylor, of Nashville, Tenn., and Mrs. Jessie Siniard, of Collinsville, Ala.

Mrs. Camp Weds Thomas P. Adams Jr.

The ceremony was performed on Tuesday evening, November 3, at Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church parsonage by Rev. Ashby Jones. In the presence of a few close friends and relatives.

After December 1 Mr. and Mrs. Adams will make their home in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Central Clerks Stage Elaborate Dinner and Dance

A dinner-dance under sponsorship of the Central of Georgia Railway Clerks' association, to be given Saturday night, November 14, on the Ansley hotel roof, is expected to attract several score members and friends, according to the committee in charge of arrangements.

Assembling at 7:30 o'clock for the dinner and a brief program of short addresses, A. M. Dunn, of the local agency, will introduce Amos Almand for the address of welcome. President L. A. Downs of the Central system will respond, and then short talks will be made by H. D. Pollard, F. J. Robinson, M. E. Smith, H. C. Gould, F. L. Russell and others.

Mr. Dunn will preside as toastmaster.

Following dinner, guests will compete for a number of prizes to be awarded in waltz and other dance competitions, all the while Tucker's Entertainers will be furnishing lively airs and dance numbers.

The Ansley roof has been the scene of many brilliant affairs, according to the entertainment committee, "but Saturday's dinner and dance will be dazzling," it is assured. Decorations will be placed during Friday and Saturday preceding the affair, and everything will be in readiness for the unusually big crowd expected.

Central of Georgia clerks stage similar affairs regularly on the roof of the Ansley.

North Peachtree Club Holds Meeting.

The North Peachtree Road Woman's club held a very interesting meeting on Tuesday, November 3. After the business session, Mrs. F. P. Stevenson sang a group of lovely songs with Mrs. E. F. Booth accompanying her, and Rev. M. Stevenson gave an interesting talk on Japanese poetry, discussing its form and construction, illustrated by a number of quotations.

The club will give a shower to the patients at hospital No. 48 on Armistice day, November 11.

Home-made cake, cookies, jellies, preserves, candy or peanuts and popcorn, or anything else to take the boys as a remembrance are asked. Club members and their friends please leave articles at the club room, Peachtree road, on Wednesday, November 11, from 2 to 4 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman To Give "At Home."

Mr. and Mrs. Gus Hoffman will be at home to their friends informally the evening of November 14, from 8 to 12 o'clock.

Model Apartment Exhibition Is at Auditorium This Week

Mrs. R. K. Rambo, president Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs, urges that all departmentalized clubs in the federation promptly appoint a chairman for the department of the American home, according to the plan of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and send the names of these chairmen to Mrs. Newton C. Wing, chairman of that department of the city federation.

Several of the American homes chairmen of the Atlanta Federation will embrace the opportunity offered at the auditorium this week, when they will act as hostesses on Club Women's day, Tuesday, at the exhibit of the model apartment put on by the Atlanta better homes committee. Mrs. R. K. Rambo will be general chairman for this day, assisted by Mrs. Newton C. Wing, Atlanta better homes chairman and also chairman for the American home department of the federation. Other club presidents who have not yet appointed their American homes chairmen are invited by Mrs. Wing to meet her at the "model apartment" Tuesday afternoon, when she will have with her valuable information from general federation headquarters, explaining this new department, conceded to be the most important in the general federation, according to the opinion of Mrs. John Sherman, president.

Letters received this past week from Mrs. Maggie Barry, general federation chairman for this department, state that in 1924-25, the first year of its organization, 22 states reported as well organized in this particular, and 41 states altogether reported as partly or wholly organized. This fall practically all states have fallen in line, and are actively engaged in the three divisions of the work: i. e. division of home economics teaching, division of home extension service, and division of home making. These have a number of committees under them, allowing a wide diversity for the choice of different states and communities.

Mrs. Barry reports that the work favored by most of the states is that done in cooperation with the national better homes in America campaign, Georgia being among the number mentioned, this because of the reason that it offers a practical application of the principles studied in the American homes department. The condition in this city now, in which the same chairman, Mrs. Wing, represents both organizations, offers a wide opportunity, and will doubtless be enthusiastically embraced.

Mrs. Wing has appointed Mrs. Edward Hardaway Smith, prominent club woman of West End, as chairman for the better homes exhibit at the pure food show this week, and the latter has been busy selecting furnishings according to the strict budget used by the better homes committee.

On Tuesday, "Club Woman's day," the Retail Food Dealers' association will make it possible for the club women to enjoy a delightful tea at 4 o'clock and Mrs. Rambo invites the members of her executive board to serve with her.

Miss Clara Lee Cone, representing the domestic science department of the city schools, gives helpful demonstrations every afternoon at the better homes exhibit, and she will assist Mrs. Rambo in receiving. Everyone interested in seeing the splendid work of Atlanta's schools along this line is invited to visit the exhibit this week.

Miss Stella Hamrick Weds Mr. Pearce.

Cartersville, Ga., November 7.—A pretty wedding of this week was that of Miss Stella Hamrick, to Leonard Graham Pearce, of Prattville, Ala., which was quietly solemnized Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hamrick, at White, Ga. Rev. S. A. Harris, of Dalton, performed the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate families and a few itimate friends.

Mrs. E. C. Goode and Mrs. L. G. Hughes, of White, sang solos.

Miss Mary Hamrick was her sisters' maid of honor.

The bride entered with her father, by whom she was given in marriage and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, his brother, Fay Pearce, of Prattville.

The bride, who is a beautiful young girl of the brunette type, was lovely in her wedding gown of black velvet, trimmed with a velvet rose. Her bouquet was bride's roses and valley lilies.

Following the ceremony an informal reception was held. After a short wedding trip to Signal Mountain Mr. and Mrs. Pearce will be at home at 530 Virginia avenue, in Atlanta, where Mr. Pearce holds a responsible position with the General Electric company.

ALLURING GLOW AND HUE OF LIGHTS TO CONTROL DANCES

Striking Innovation To Decide 'No Breaks', College Set Chatter

A delightful innovation at Garber's on last Friday night was the new feature of subdued lights for the no-breaks.

Errol Eckford, plenipotentiary-in-charge, announced that in the future the no-breaks would not be known by number, but by color. The overhead lights would be turned off and from another switch lights of different colors would be turned on to indicate which no-break would follow. Instead of the first, second, third, fourth and fifth, they would be known as the red, blue, yellow, green and purple no-breaks. Does not that sound novel and alluring?

I wonder if Halloween, with its spirit of witchery and charm, was not responsible for the thought? How Marthane and Errol came by the suggestion is something we do not know, but there is little as to who is responsible for its continuance.

How quickly these girls sensed the becomingness of the soft lights! The rosy glow of the red seemed turned on particularly for the enhancement of such beauty as Marguerite Colley's, Isabel Breitenbucher's and Martha Maddox's, while the soft yellow lights brought out the charms of the Sarah Hurts, Yolande Gwinns and Helen Nobles'. Each color called into being its own distinctive type.

And the boys liked it!

Nothing of personal vanity, of course, simply a matter of such great pride in lingering so long in the strongest rays of the strongest spotlight for the purpose of showing off the fairest of all dancing partners. It was a bright, happy scene!

How could anyone have the heart—or rather the lack of it—to say of such joyous, youthful spirits that "they are contraband, their possession without a permit, a high crime and a misdemeanor!"

Howard Outwitted.

During the quiet moment at one of the week-end dances Virginia Turman was heard to remark to one of her neighbors, "Watch me during the next no-break!"

"Why?" she was asked.

"There goes my partner for it. There—watch him—there—no—directly across—here—here he comes—there—he has passed! Now you understand, don't you? Have you ever seen anyone who could cover as much territory in a given length of time on a ballroom floor as Howard Abbot? He makes the circuit of the entire floor at least four times to any other boy's once. Never does he collide with any of the other dancers, but my—it's dizzy and so am I, when I think of the next no-break!"

Someone suggested there must be method in his madness, thus eluding breaks which would mean the loss of his partner—the rate of speed determining the desirability, or lack of it, of said partner. The faster the Marathon was being done the greater the prize he held and the more desirous the other boys were of having him share it.

Generally speaking, Howard was successful whichever way he played the game, however I did see one boy who was bold enough to cross his path.

Howard shot by with Kitty Parks. G. B. Strickler, standing near, determined to take Kitty away from him. G. B. made a dignified and genteel, but absolutely futile attempt, to break on the speedy Howard, who quickly dodged the attempt and was immediately lost in the crowd. G. B. had no intention of being so easily deterred from any such good purpose as this. He first definitely located the offender and then, shooting diagonally across the room, took position and calmly waited to put up the proper amount of nesessary interference on the forward pass of Howard Abbot. Of course I don't have to tell you that G. B. captured the prize, but how pitifully short a time he was allowed to keep it is another story.

Football maneuvers and tactics pale into insignificance compared with the strategem necessary on the floor of one of these college dances!

This speed demon of Garber's is responsible for the suggestion of requiring the boys to attach speedometers to their ankles making them keep within—and also up to a certain specification. The last, probably for the purpose of bringing Hal Smith up to normal in same particular! About him we will tell you another time.

FLAPPER OPPROBIUM.

And thinking of strategem makes me want to speak of finesse! I have always thought them close kin.

In connection with finesse my thought is of the college girl of today and of how patiently she has borne the flapper opprobium, when the term has always been as repulsive to her as to the rest of the known world. Cudgels should more often be wielded in her defense.

Certainly in cleverness, in wit, in recherche, tact, polish and finesse she begins where the college girl of a few generations ago left off. The girl of today handles situations which in their difficulty would quickly have eliminated the girl of olden times altogether. She has concentration of thought, quickness of action and dispatch of business unknown to previous generations.

Let's approve more of our girls, talk to and of them more constructively and adjust ourselves to the standards of the intense civilization of the modern life which surrounds us.

A CLASH OF WITS.

Louise Dooly, in one of her recent daily contributions to The Constitution entitled "Slams and Salaams" quotes H. G. Wells as saying through one of his characters, Dr. Devizes, a student of mental quirks, "Men compared with women are steadier and stupider. Women compared with men are quicker and sillier."

A few days ago this quotation was given to a room full of college boys and girls, with a request for an open discussion of same.

For the next half hour the conversation was spicy indeed! These keen wits, which are in the polishing process at the present time, surrounded by a classroom atmosphere of science, biology, psychology, evolution and the like, had many interesting theories to advance. Even the latest of all scientific(?) discoveries, "the cement head"—as recently so futilely exploited by the Chicago lawyer—came in for its share of the discussion.

The question was asked which they consider the lesser stigma—stupidity or silliness? Of course the boys thought stupidity preferable to silliness. The girls thought nothing worse than stupidity and preferred silliness.

A heavy rooter for the male side precipitated the end of the argument by saying, "Well, one must be stupid to be silly and so you girls come in on both count."

BELLES A-VISITIN'.

Hortense Adams and Mary Mosely, two of our very most popular and charming girls, both seniors, one at Washington seminary and the other at the Girls' High school, respectively, were absent from the week-end activities in Atlanta.

Very likely we missed them more than they did us, as it was to other college festivities they went—the Clemson dances.

Isn't it strange how appealing this kind of a thing is to all Atlanta girls when no nicer boys are to be found anywhere nor no better times to be had on earth than in the Atlanta college set!

It must be the enticing spirit of conquest—more worlds to conquer!

Tech Versus Auburn.

That Tech must beat Auburn on Thanksgiving—the game which always breaks up our Thanksgiving family turkey dinner, but which price we do not begrudge paying if there is a victory for the Yellow and White—is the final decree of the Tech freshmen. There are more reasons for this ruling than mere loyalty to their alma mater. Truly, in the eyes of the freshmen, those little yellow and white caps, superimposed by the upper classmen, are the "abomination of desolation" separating them, as it were, from so many of the good things of college life.

A Thanksgiving victory for Tech has a most direct and happy bearing on this, the bete noir of their young lives, for out of great exurberance of joyousness and good-will toward all mankind a great bonfire is built in celebration. To this the freshmen are invited and with great magnanimity of spirit, the upper classmen allow them to cast these hated caps as brands into the burning.

If Tech loses——woe is the freshman, for the cap has to be donned again until Christmas!

So— Bow, wow!

Bow, wow, ki, yi, hot, cold, wet, dry, get there,

Eli, Tech!

Certainly, neither "hot, cold, wet, dry," blocks the way of the Atlanta fans, judging from the thousands who sat all around us, armed cap-a-pie with goloshes, slickers, umbrellas and extra car robes, last Saturday through the drizzle which never ceased during the entire Tech-Notre Dame game. Atlanta, en masse, surely backs the great battles fought every Saturday on Grant field. During the hours of the game, the residential and business sections of the city look like the streets of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village."

So, of course, the public will help the team whip Auburn on Thanksgiving day and the freshmen will have the opportunity of making their contribution to the big bonfire.

Emory's Glee Club.

Such wonderful things we heard Sunday concerning Emory's Glee club! Nothing short of a trip to Europe next summer for everyone of them. A representative from the school has just returned from across where he went to complete every arrangement for the trip next summer. To pay their passage over, the boys will be the official musicians on board ship.

Strange how particularly desirable any phase of connection with this organization has suddenly become. Such a perfect willingness of spirit, nothing too menial from polishing horns to polishing boots!

Good luck to Emory's Glee club and may every dream for the summer of 1926 more than come true!

Peachtree Circle Celebration.

Julia Meador, nobly asisted by Cornelia Orme, Gates Eckford, Jacqueline Moore, Martha Pritchard, Frances Barnwell, Eleanor Johnson, to say nothing of a score or more of college swains, did their duty in the enlivening of the Peachtree Circle neighborhood of Julia's home on Halloween night.

The customary black cats, lightened pumpkins, be-masked and be-sheeted figures snooping around in darkened rooms, while the playing of the usual pranks and jokes were the order of the evening. A fortune teller was imported for the occasion and pink palms, which cast only the rosiest glow over the futures of their lucky owners, were read. A most bewitching witch added a bright bit of color to the scene.

The customary games and pranks may have been played, but certainly no ordinarily good time was had. Any of the neighbors would be willing to make an affidavit to this fact.

Such is the manner of all successful Halloween celebrations.

Chi Phi Alumni To Celebrate Twenty-Second Anniversary

The 22d anniversary of the founding of the Atlanta Alumni Association of Chi Phi will be celebrated Friday and Saturday, November 13 and 14.

An elaborate dinner-dance, preceded by annual meeting, for election of officers, will be held at the Piedmont Driving club Friday night. Members of the fraternity from the entire southeast have been invited to spend the week-end in Atlanta, representatives being present from the Georgia School of Technology, Emory university, University of Georgia, University of Alabama and Vanderbilt. Large delegations from Savannah, August, Miami and other places are coming to the meeting and dance Friday night and to the Tech-Georgia game the next day. Resident and out-of-town members are requested to telephone or wire R. W. Courts, Jr., 113 Hunt building, Walnut 3110, and make reservations. Plates $3 each.

The officers of the Atlanta Alumni association, under whose auspices the dinner and meeting will be held, are James B. Nevin, president; Richard W. Courts, Jr., first vice president; Jesse Draper, second vice president, and W. A. Parker, secretary and treasurer. Executive committee, Alex W. Smith, Jr., chairman; Edward Van Winkle, John W. Grant, Jr., Charles E. Black, Jr., W. Shellman Boston and William Sibley.

The past presidents of the association and their wives will be seated at the president's table. The past presidents have been John M. Slaton, James L. Mason, John W. Grant, Sr., W. R. Hammond, John A. Hynds, Frank K. Boland, Frank R. Mitchell, Phinizy Calhoun, Nash R. Broyles, John T. Dennis, Jr., H. Warner Martin, Robert S. Parker, Hughes Spalding and Luther Z. Rosser. Ex-Governor John M. Slaton will make a short address.

In connection with the meeting of the Atlanta Alumni association Friday night and the large attendance of Chi Phis from a distance, there will be a meeting to which all members are invited at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon at the Capital City club of undergraduate and graduate delegates, for consideration of fraternity problems affecting the fifth zone of the Chi Phi fraternity, which embraces Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi. John A. Hynds, chairman zone committee, will preside.

On Saturday afternoon following the football gam the Tech chapter of Chi Phi will give the visitors a dance at the Georgian Terrace.

Mrs. Herbert Choate Is Honor Guest.

Mrs. Herbert Choate who has been the guest of Mrs. F. P. Vincent in Athens has returned to her home in Ansley Park. While the guest of Mrs. Vincent beautiful parties were given in her honor.

Those entertaining in her honor were: Mrs. Burney Dobbs, Mrs. J. W. Barnett, Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mrs. Paul Brown, Mrs. F. P. Vincent and Mrs. Callaway.

Mrs. Vincent entertained in Mrs. Choate's honor Tuesday evening at a bridge party. English Hawthorne and gorgeous dahlias were used as decorations which lent a rich coloring to the antique furnishings.

Four tables were entertained at bridge, a buffet supper being served after the games.

Dr. Hilkey Honored At Lovely Dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Thomson entertained at dinner on Thursday evening, November 5, at their home on North Decatur road, in honor of Dr. C. J. Hilkey, who recently came to Atlanta to become dean of the Emory University Law school. Dinner was served at a beautifully appointed round table decorated with yellow chrysanthemums.

Invited to meet Dr. Hilkey were all of the lawyers in Atlanta who are now or have been at any time in the past, connected with the Emory University Law school as instructors, including Judge John S. Candler, Harold Hirsch, I. S. Hopkins, W. A. Sutherland, Warren Moise, E. M. Underwood, Smythe Gambrell, R. B. Troutman, Asa W. Candler, Harrison Jones, Paul E. Bryan, Henry Quillian, J. M. Cormack and Harmon Caldwell. Others present were Dr. H. W. Cox, president of Emory university; Dr. T. H. Jack, John P. Stewart, Thomas J. Long, W. B. Cody and A. L. Lippitt.

Mary Baldwin Alumnae Meeting.

The Atlanta chapter of the Mary Baldwin Alumnae association will meet Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock with Mrs. T. Howard Bell, 665 Peachtree street. All members are urged to be present and a cordial invitation is extended to any Mary Baldwin girl residing or visiting in Atlanta, not hitherto communicated with, to attend this meeting. Further information will be given by telephoning the chairman, Mrs. L. E. Chalenor, Hemlock 2509-W, or Miss Venice Mayson, secretry, Hemlock 6396.

Are You Ready for Thanksgiving?

Civilization began when men first started fires. And home fires burn best in a good range or stove. Right now is the best time to get that new range when winter and Thanksgiving offer the most need of it. These prices, too, will interest you.

And also by buying now we can set up your range or stove for you at once. If you wait it will take longer to install it when you do buy.

The features of this range that you should know—It is all cast iron; the oven will not warp or crack and it will remain level for years for cooking pies and cakes. It has a horseshoe hot water back, which does not interfere with baking, and gives unlimited quantities of boiling water in 35 to 40 minutes. The main collar joint is invisible, being in rear of the hot closet.

Where can you match this range at these prices?

$75.00 value High Mark Cast Iron Range..... $59.50

ATLANTA BRIDE HAS DUPLICATE OF MARILYN MILLER'S BROOCH

News and Views of Interest In Atlanta's Social Whirl

By Bessie S. Stafford.

"YES," answered a lovely Atlanta matron, who, although she has been wed not quite a year, possesses a collection of rare jewels fit for a queen, and is the cynosure of all eyes in the exclusive set in which she moves"yes, it's an exact duplicate of Marilyn Miller's. She graciously consented for the jeweler to set my brooch to make it exactly like hers."

Not so many months ago, when Mr. and Mrs. Blank were honeymooning in New York as Mr. and Mrs. Newly-Wed, they visited an exclusive shop in Gotham, where Mr. Newly-Wed searched for a handsome diamond pin for his charming bride. With pencil, the husband, widely known for his taste, drafted the design he had in mind for the jeweler to see. Tray after tray laden with precious stones set in lacy platinum workmanship was brought forward for inspection, but none came up to his expectations. In the discussion which naturally took place regarding the planning of the gift, the jeweler described Miss Miller's pin, telling of the same possibilities offered in the groupng oif the diamonds owned by the Atlantan.

"Sunny," with sprightly, blonde Marilyn Miller as the star of this triumphant musical comedy, was playing at the time to the "standing room only" sign in Philadelphia. The interested jeweler phoned to the Quaker city, with the pretty and obliging Miss Miller responding that she would be en route to New York Saturday evening and her brooch would be in the hands of the New York jeweler soon thereafter to show the southern bride and groom and that she would be greatly flattered if they liked it.

It pleased!

The pin was copied and sent to the Atlanta matron.

Miss Lewis Keeps a Secret.

EVIDENTLY, Miss Lula Lewis possesses the official reticence so freely attributed to the male of the species, for she understands the art of keeping a secret, possessing at the same time the ability to be entertaining without telling anything entrusted by her friends. A college beau, who likes to do a lot of sheiking, told her in the most confiding manner that he was married, but he didn't want anyone to find it out. "Don't tell a soul about it, Lula. Nobody in the world knows this but you," he confessed.

Two long weeks passed, and Lula, true to her promise, but literally consumed with excitement over this startling bit of news, hadn't dared whisper it to herself again.

The self-styled benedict, who enjoys the social limelight, seeking through this method to start a rumor on himself, approached Lula after the fortnight had rolled by, saying, "I haven't heard anybody even mention my marriage to Miss So and So, Lula."

"You told me not to tell a soul, and I didn't," exclaimed the little sub-deb.

"I know I did, but of course I never expected you to keep the secret, I just tried you out," said he.

Wedding Echoes.

IT'S all over now, but the strains of Mendelssohn's recessional are still ringing in our ears, recalling the radiant bride, Mrs. Edward Mills Maclean, her hand resting upon the arm of the proud and happy groom as she left St. Philip's cathedral, where only 10 minutes before, as Miss Margaret Massengale, she approached the altar Wednesday evening with her father, St. Elmo Massengale, to Lohengrin's "Here Comes the Bride."

The bride's patrician features were veiled in misty white tulle, the first time this old-fashioned custom has been followed in Atlanta for many blue moons. For the something borrowed, she carried a real lace handkerchief belonging to an intimate friend and having been carried by three generations. It was folded in the tiny white prayer book which the bride carried to please her younger sister and brother, who diligently searched the Atlanta shops to find one. In the heel of her dainty Cinderella-like slipper nestled that accepted omen of good luuck, a four-leaf clover, embroidered upon a white satin pad. It was Jake Lowery's good fortune to shoot the highest dice and win the gold cigarette case, while Miss Terrell Austin caught the wonderful bridal bouquet, and maybe she'll carry out the emblematic program and be the next bride. Goodby was said in the most natural manner by the bride and groom. They didn't even try to slip off from the bridal party and relatives. They accepted the shower of rice and rose petals at the station as the happy ending of a beautiful romance and the symbolic beginning of a roseate future.

It wasn't such an easy matter for Mr. and Mrs. Maclean to decide upon where they would go on their wedding trip, for they are very fortunate young people in that they have traveled very nearly all over the world.

"Let's go somewhere that neither of us has ever been," said the bride.

"Where will it be?" queried the groom.

"I've never seen Niagara Falls," said the demure little bride.

So off they went on a motor trip to Canada, whence they will drop down to Niagara Falls, the famous honeymooning spot of a generation ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Pegram's Party.

THE sumptuousness of the Biltmore hotel served as the magnificent setting for the reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pegram III, honoring those distinguished railroad officials whose annual visits have come to be regarded as one of the high lights in Atlanta social history, thanks to the custom of Mr. and Mrs. Pegram. This group of men are said to control three-fourths of the nation's wealth.

Fairfax Harrison, genial and aristocratic Virginian who heads the Southern railway system as its illustrious president, and enjoying the highest social honors in the United States, had a pleasant and appropriate greeting for every person. His father was a member of the Confederate cabinet under Jefferson Davis, and Burton Harrison, his brother, was governor general of our Pacific possessions, the Philippine Islands. L. F. Loree, of New York, an eminent visitor, considered an authority upon the technical understanding of railway government, was a most impressive personage standing in the receiving line, his importance registering immediately upon those who met him. Henry Miller, J. B. Munson, Ernest E. Norris and W. H. Tayloe, a popular foursome formerly residing in Atlanta, were constantly surrounded by a circle of howdy-doing old friends.

A gossipy, spicy little story is told starring Jeremiah Milbank, the good-looking, unassuming gentleman, with a background of forty millions, who moved around so modestly that one never suspected he had a penny. The story is given to you as it came to me.

Mr. Milbank was among America's capitalists first to recognize the commercial value and development of this great railway system spider-webbing Dixieland, buying as much of the common stock as he could lay hands upon.

One fine day he called up the office of J. P. Morgan to make an appointment to confer with this awe-inspiring financial god, in reference to the common stock being put on a dividend basis.

Mr. Morgan deferred making the engagement.

But, it wasn't but a few moments afterward when he found out Mr. Milbank was probably the heaviest stockholder in the organization and he immediately sent for the gentleman in question exercising such a powerful influence upon the Southern's progressive future.

Dividends were declared thereafter. Selah!

Memory's Flowers.

A GARDEN of Honolulu's fairest flowers will bloom in memory of little Douglas Methvin, the precious baby boy sent from Heaven to only dwell for 18 months in the hearts and home of Captain and Mrs. Theron Methvin, who recently met his death by drowning. The tragedy occurred on the parade grounds of Schofield barracks, Hawaii, immediately in front of the quarters occupied by the little boy's parents. While playing in the sunshine of this tropical clime with a group of his playmates, little Douglas stumbled into the fountain, in his eagerness to reach for a water-lily or a tiny golden fish. Immediately following the fatal accident, the commanding officer of Schofield barracks, United States army post, ordered the pool drained and the sacred spot planted in the loveliest of flowers in memory of this, America's youngest citizen, to meet his death in Hawaii.

Mrs. Methvin, the little boy's mother, was before her marriage Miss Louise Dorough, of this city, and beloved by a wide circle of friends. She was a popular member of the Atlanta Overseas club, having served in France during the world war.

Football Dance Next Saturday.

An interesting event of the week will be the Georgia-Tech football frolic at the Atlanta Woman's club Saturday evening, from 9 until 12 o'clock. The famous Bulldog orchestra from the university will furnish the music.

Thanksgiving Party To Honor Veterans.

A Thanksgiving party by the Fulto Chapter, U. D. C., will be given to the veterans in the Soldiers' home on Wednesday before Thanksgiving. To this party all veterans of the city will be invited.

The chapter will be busy for the next few weeks assisting in the harvest campaign of Stone Mountain memorial coins. Resolutions to that effect were adopted at the meeting last Tuesday at the Chamber of Commerce.

The president, Mrs. J. W. Hollingsworth, made an interesting report of the state convention. Mrs. Hollingsworth and Mrs. E. B. Williams were made delegates to the U. D. C. convention in Hot Springs. Mrs. M. P. Jepson and Mrs. W. D. Lomax were elected alternates.

Mrs. Henry C. Covington, Mrs. Langley and Mrs. Edgar Alexander were the three new members who affiliated themselves with the chapter.

Miss Gleason Honored At Lovely Shower.

Miss Betty Gober entertained Saturday afternoon at a miscellaneous shower at her home on Atlanta avenue in honor of Miss Hazel Gleason, whose marriage to Glenard Flack will be an event of November 16.

The house was decorated throughout with fall foliage and Halloween colors. A contest and a program were enjoyed during the afternoon. The prize was a beautiful linen hand-embroidered guest towel and was won by Miss Edith Magruder.

A delightful lunch was served and a social time enjoyed by the many friends of the bride-elect who attended.

Dr. Stirling Addresses Emory Elementary.

A delightful and highly entertaining address by Dr. Stirling of the public health service of Washington, D. C., was given at the regular monthly meeting of Emory Elementary P.-T. A., the president, Mrs. Marion T. Benson, presiding.

A very interesting report was given by the chairman of committee on arrangements for the Halloween party. A motion was carried that all available funds this year be used for a school library. A social half hour with refreshments was enjoyed.

Atlanta Students Will Take Part at Shorter.

Rome, Ga., November 7.—Two Atlanta students who will play important roles in "The Whole Town's Talking," which will be presented by Shorter players, dramatic club of the college, in the college auditorium on Monday evening, November 9, are Misses Elizabeth Fall, secretary and treasurer of the club, and Miss Evelyn Sheffield, president of the senior class. The players have scored several signal successes during the past two years in their presentations of popular comedies, notably "Green Stockings," "Dulcy," "The New Poor," and their out-door productions of Shakespearean plays are noteworthy.

The cast of characters for the Monday night performance is as follows: Henry Simons, a manufacturer, Vera Cochran, Camilla; Harriet Simons, his wife, Miss Mildred Esserman, Rome; Ethel Simons, their daughter, Miss Mildred Glover, Rome; Letty Lyte, motion picture star, Miss Sheffield; Lila Wilson and Sally Otis, friends of Ethel Simons, Misses Fall and Margaret Haynes; Chester Binney, Simon's partner, Miss Helen Hardman, Commerce; Donald Swift, motion picture director, Miss Mildred McCord, Rome; Roger Shields, young Chicago man, Miss Elizabeth Bryan, Rome; Annie, a maid, Miss Anna Berta Diffee, Cordele; Sadie Bloom, Miss Isabelle Miller, Fort Payne, Ala.; taxi driver, Miss Hannes Reynolds, Meridian, Miss.; Mrs. Jackson, Miss Ethenell Morton; girls, Misses Doris McCormick, Elizabeth Powers, Dorothy Brannen, Louise Thompson, Evelyn Heifner.

Church Society Is Entertained

Members of Fortified Hills Baptist church W. M. S. were entertained at a ghost party held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Jones on Chappell road, Monday evening, November 2.

All the guests were in costume and several Halloween games were played.

Those attending were Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Wier, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Call, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Justus, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wier, Mr. and Mrs. Echols, Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Coursey, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Pinson, Mr. and Mrs. Vaugh, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Belle Ivey, Mr. and Mrs. Holly, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Gordon, Mrs. Bessie Gan, Mrs. J. A. Bledsoe, Mrs. W. A. Austin, Mrs. Farmer, Miss Margaret Farmer, Miss Delta Bledsoe, Miss Margaret Ritch and Charlie Gray Ritch.

Miss Mary Thornton Continues To Be Feted at Parties

Miss Mary Thornton, an attractive bride-elect of the week, continues to b efeted at a round of social affairs.

Mrs. Alfred Drake will be hostess at a large tea Monday afternoon in compliment to Miss Thornton.

Monday evening Mrs. Eva Thornton, mother of the bride, will entertain the members of the bridal party following the wedding rehearsal.

Mrs. W. T. Roberts and Mrs. Walter DuPre were joint hostesses at a bridge-luncheon Saturday at the home of Mrs. Roberts in Fairburn.

Another lovely affair complimenting Miss Thornton on Saturday was the bridge-tea at which Mrs. Harold Youmans was hostess Saturday afternoon on Virginia avenue in College Park.

Monday Evening Dance At Henry Grady.

The regular Monday evening dances at the Henry Grady hotel are delightful affairs and largely attended by the young members of society.

Many congenial parties have been planned for Monday evening, November 9. All dances are held on the mezzanine floor, the ballroom and dining room being thrown together. Special music has been arranged for the occasion.

The chaperones will be Mr. and Mrs. Otis Penn, Mrs. DeLoach, Mrs. John Durham, Mrs. Richardson and Mr. and Mrs. Chester Johnson.

Miss Richards Is Feted Bride-Elect.

Miss Edna Lee Richards, a charming bride-elect of November, continues to be feted with a round of beautiful parties. Miss Dorothy Winship was hostess at a delightful bridge-luncheon Wednesday at her home in Ansley Park complimenting Miss Richards.

Mrs. J. N. Flynt was hostess at a miscelloneous shower and luncheon Thursday in honor of Miss Richards.

The handsomely appointed table was overlaid with a Madeira cover and had as its central decoration a large silver basket filled with pink roses, lavender and white chrysanthemums.

Mrs. Flynt was assisted in entertaining by Miss Julia Flynt.

Covers were placed for Miss Edna Lee Richards, Miss Pearl Richards, Miss Katherine Moreland, Miss Helen Spalding, Miss Elizabeth Mayson, Miss Dorothy Winship, Miss Margaret Wilson, Miss Virginia Willoughby, Miss Julia Flynt, Mrs. George Richards and Mrs. J. Murphy.

Fashion Show for Kiddies To Be Staged on Emory Campus

One of the first events of the holiday season that is of particular interes. to Atlanta social and civic circles will take place on the evening of November 21 when the elementary Emory Parent-Teacher association of which Mrs. M. T. Benson is president, will stage a fashion show for kiddies on the Emory campus with the cooperation of Davison-Paxon-Stokes company.

This fashion show will be the first dramatic undertaking of the elementary Emory P.-T. A., and the members are putting forth every effort to make it an unqualified success. There will be about forty or more children attending the school, taking part. Admission will be 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children, the money to be used to further educational interests in the school.

The officers of the P.-T. A. are Mrs. Benson, president; Mrs. S. E. McConnell, vice president; Mrs. T. R. Allen, secretary, and Mrs. Hugh Carmichael, treasurer. Mrs. C. M. LeRoux is chairman of the committee in charge of this program. Mrs. LeRoux has arranged committees to take care of everything—staging, directing, musical numbers, dressing the children in the special costumes they will wear, and rehearsals.

The fashion show will be largely in pantomime with the latest things in children's frocks and coats and hats displayed by a charming group of kiddies. There will be a central theme, however, and a real little plot to carry it through. All of this will be published at a later date. Further information may be obtained from any member of the P.-T. A. of the elementary Emory school.

Miss Woodberry Is Elected President of Overseas Club

Miss Frances Woodberry was unanimously elected president of the Atlanta unit, Women's Overseas Service league, at a meeting held Saturday afternoon in the Chamber of Commerce building. Other officers elected were Miss Helen Muse, vice president; Mrs. John Harland, treasurer; Mrs. J. O. Sanders, recording secretary; Mrs. James B. Buchanan, historian.

Miss Woodberry succeeds Mrs. Perrin Nicolson, Jr., whose administration has been marked for its broadened and continued service at United States Hospital 48.

Miss Woodberry served overseas during the world war as a Y. M. C. A. entertainer for eighteen months and her beautiful dramatic soprano voice gave unspeakable pleasure and joy to the American soldiers in both the hospitals and the leave areas. She is an extremely accomplished young woman, possessing ability of executive nature, tact and a far-reaching vision. She is a charter member of the Atlanta Overseas club, which is composed of women who served across the seas during the world war.

Mrs. C. E. Marshall Is Given Party.

Mrs. Jones Calls Junior Meeting.

Mrs. Wiley Jones, chairman of the junior department of the Decatur Woman's club, announces a meeting of the junior department in the ladies' parlor of the First Presbyterian church, Tuesday, November 10, at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Jones has organized three groups of girls according to ages. The first group consists of girls between six and ten, the second group between 10 and 16, the third group between 16 and 20.

Mrs. Jones will supervise the work of the oldest group and subchairman will be appointed for the other groups at an early date. All interested in this work are requested to be present.

Contest Awards Are Announced By Writers' Club

The Atlanta Writers' club met in the banquet hall of the Woman's club for one of the most important meetings of the season Thursday evening.

Much interest has centered in the prize contest awards which were to be announced on this evening owing to the large number of manuscripts possessing merit which have been presented before the club members during the past year. The manuscripts receiving the highest number of votes at various meetings of the club during the 1924-25 season were placed in the hands of a committee, the prize manuscripts to be selected from these. The serious and light verse were then placed in the hands of Frank L. Stanton, poet laureate of Georgia, as referee. The following were selected by him as possessing the greatest merit from a literary standpoint:

Serious verse, "Holly," by Kate Fort Codington, mentioned for first prize; "Trees," by Jean Graham, and "Dreams," by Daniel Whitehead Hick, received honorable mention.

Light verse, "Life's Poetry," by Lida Wilson Turner, mentioned for first prize; "The Mother Wind," by Mary Johnson Blackburn, received honorable mention.

Of the light sketches selected, "Ella Bett," by Dr. W. F. Melton, was voted upon for first prize, while "Fairfax Returns," also by Dr. Melton, received honorable mention.

Tim Thornton has offered to publish the prize-winning manuscripts, together with other selections from the manuscripts submitted by the club members as a courtesy to the club.

The Thursday evening program was also devoted to the reading of original manuscripts for the 1925-26 prize award. A poem, "Memories," by Mrs. Ben Hill, and a short story, "Bluffing Through," by Mrs. Ward Wright, received the highest number of votes.

A number of interesting impromptu speeches were made, bringing before the club members various matters of importance. Dudley Cowles stressed the importance of the lecture series which is being sponsored by the Writers' club, and urged the cooperation of every member of the club in making a success of this undertaking.

Mrs. Ben Lee Crew, chairman of the membership committee, read before the club an interesting list of writers who have made application for membership in the Writers' club, a list which was unanimously accepted for membership in the club. A number of interesting visitors were also introduced at this meeting.

A delightful musical program was furnished by Mrs. J. B. McNelly and Mrs. Goodyear.

Woman's Club To Award Prizes For Best Essays on Wednesday

The splendid climax to "picture week," which has been sponsored in Atlanta recently by the art department of the Atlanta Woman's club, will take place Wednesday afternoon, November 11, when the boys and girls of the junior and senior high schools of the city will assemble in the auditorium of the Woman's club to receive the prizes offered for the best essays on subjects chosen from the following suggestions: "What Does National Picture Week Mean to Atlanta?" "Why Atlanta Should Have an Art Museum," "The Value of a Good Picture in the Home and in the School," "Estimate the Value To Be Received by Atlanta From the Exhibit of the Grand Central Galleries of New York," "In Our Exhibit of Local Art, Name the Picture You Like Most and Why."

The above subjects will be discussed at the meeting Wednesday afternoon by the following speakers: J. Reed Hunter, assistant superintendent of the public schools; Mrs. Samuel Inman, chairman of art for the General Federation of Women's Clubs; J. Carrol Paine, J. J. Haverty, Mrs. Charles Jerome and others.

Five prizes will be awarded at this time to the students covering each point most intelligently. Mrs. John M. Slaton will present the prizes, which were contributed by Mrs. Clifford Walker, Mrs. Samuel Inman, J. Carrol Paine, president of the Art association; J. J. Haverty, member of Grand Central Galleries, and the art department of the Womans' club.

The judges for the contest include Mrs. Emma Garrett Boyd, Mrs. Samuel Inman, Mrs. Norman Sharp, Mrs. James R. Little, Mrs. George B. Hinman, chairman of prize essays.

A most attractive program has been arranged for the afternoon, which includes the reading of the prize essays and short talks by interesting speakers and music. Prizes awarded the students will be the property of the school that the wimner attends and the prize will have the name of the winner placed in some manner upon the gift.

An invitation has been extended to all local artists to attend this meeting and the Parent-Teacher associations of the schools competing for the prizes are also cordially invited to attend. This meeting is in a measure to boost for the establishment of an art museum in this city and the boys and girls of the public schools will be a strong force in making this institution possible.

Mrs. James R. Little, chairman of the club art division, announces an important call meeting of all local artists, just following the afternoon program Wednesday, for the purpose of discussing some very important plans for future activities.

West End Woman's Club Plans Interesting Fall Activities

Fall activities in the West End Woman's club are going forward in rapid succession. Answering a long-felt need in the "Heart of West End," the club opened a lovely tea room Wednesday, corner of Lee and Gordon streets, where luncheon and dinner parties may be served as well as regular dinners for business men and women of the community.

Mrs. D. F. Deen, chairman and Mrs. C. D. Layton, co-chairman, were given much praise for the lovely decorations and the splendid dinner served. Mrs. Alice Embree Means, chairman of the literary department, will have charge of the tea room this week. The Fifty Fifty club, a newly organized literary club of West End, has made reservations for luncheon Friday. Dinner will be served daily from 11:30 to 2 o'clock.

Other Activities.

"Poppy Day" in West End will be well taken care of with Mrs. Grady Andrews and a large committee in charge. Mrs. Andrews has shown much efficiency in this line of work in the past.

Plans for the bazaar and pure food show to be held the first week of December, are rapidly going forward. Mrs. Emmett Brogdon announces that many lovely hand-made articles suitable for Christmas gifts will be on sale, many other interesting features are being planned. A number of the leading merchants of the city have made reservations for the pure food exhibit.

Zero Hour.

At the close of the business meeting Wednesday "Zero Hour" will be observed. This feature of the meetings is planned to stimulate the attendance. Mrs. W. O. Petty will have charge of this event.

The meeting will be held at 3 o'clock in the main assembly hall, Mrs. Chester Johnson, presiding. At this time reports of divisional chairmen will be heard and important recommendations of the executive board will come before the body. Mrs. H. W. Wilder, treasurer, will be on hand at 2:30 o'clock to receive dues, those who have not already paid are urged to do so at this meeting.

The executive board of the club held an enthusiastic meeting Wednesday, Mrs. H. W. Wilder spoke of the better films luncheon given Monday at the Henry Grady hotel, also of the wonderful "Passion Play" which is being sponsored by the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs, to be shown at the auditorium the week of November 30. Mrs. Wilder urges everyone to attend. Mrs. M. P. Jones, was appointed chairman of home economics.

The Thursday evening dances are proving more popular with the younger set. Chaperons for next Thursday are Dr. and Mrs. C. Manry, Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Wright.

Dr. W. W. Alexander To Speak At Y.W.C.A. Sunday Afternoon

The Young Women's Christian association is an international organization, and, with the other countries of the world that have Y. W. C. A.'s, the Atlanta association is observing the week of prayer, November 8-14, for world fellowship and friendliness. On Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock at 21 West Baker street, there will be a vesper service, at which Mrs. Stephen Barnett will preside and Dr. W. W. Alexander will speak. After the meeting, the social committee of the board of directors, of which Mrs. Robert White is chairman, will serve tea. Both the vesper service at 4 and the tea at 5 are open to the public.

On Tuesday at 7 o'clock, prior to Mr. Knox's Bible talk, Mrs. E. K. Large will conduct a short devotional service, stressing world fellowship. There will be a group of business and professional women present, but the meeting is open to any who care to come.

On Thursday evening at 7 o'clock, Mrs. John McEachern will lead the devotional period with the Young Business Girls' federation. All are invited to this meeting.

On Friday evening, Mrs. W. A. Smart will speak to the Rainbow club, which is composed of girls from Hamilton-Carhart overall factory and their friends. These industrial girls have a flourishing club and will be glad to have any who desire to hear Mrs. Smart with them.

Sweeping everything under the bed...

WE SOMETIMES close our eyes to facts this way. We may not see the dirt, but it's there just the same.

Don't close your eyes to the dirty alleys and backyards; the one or two rooms in which your washwoman eats, sleeps and washes when she moves indoors from the cold weather; the many days a month when your clothes are actually placed under the bed because there's nowhere else to put them. You may not want to admit it, but these things exist just the same.

Here's the other side of it.

A big, modern, sanitary plant built for washing. The latest scientific equipment; modern wash methods; pure soap; rain-soft water; experienced operators; careful attention to every one of your garments; and keen-minded executives who are always on the alert to develop new and more efficient ways to serve you. The modern laundry is the ideal place for your wash. Don't close your eyes to facts.

There's a laundry service for every need. Reach for your telephone on Wash Day.

Christain Temperance Union News

BY M. FRANCES MEADORS BURGHARD.

One of the most beautiful objects at the recent centennial celebration at Jackson, in Butts county, was the snow-white float of the Jackson Woman's Christian Temperance union.

It was gracefully draped in bunting, with a lavish use of fluffy white chrysanthemums and decorative fringe arranged by artistic hands. The letters W. C. T. U. appeared on either side.

In the center, under an immense white umbrella of flowers, fringe tied with a white satin ribbon bow, were grouped six lovely little girls wearing their daintiest white dresses, keeping dry, as the legend on two sides of the umbrella advised all spectators to do.

The arrangement of the driver's cab was a delight to the eye, there sat the Butts county prohibition agent at the wheel.

The float was more than attractive since it visualized the three dominant aims of the W. C. T. U.—Prohibition, Purity and Peace.

Mrs. J. W. Lyons, who planned the float, has served the Jackson W. C. T. U. as president for many years, making it a civic asset. Associated with her officially are Mrs. Verna Wright and Mrs. R. J. Carmichael. Mrs. J. W. Crum is president of the Butts County W. C. T. U.

The members of the Jackson union maintained a serving booth during the celebration also.

Mother and Daughter Secure Hundreds of Signers to Mile Petition.

Two rural members of the Canton W. C. T. U., Mrs. Emma Chattain and her daughter, Miss Grace Chattain, have grandly proved that "many a mickle makes a muckle" in their efforts for signatures of total abstainers to the petition for the strict enforcement of the prohibition law, which the W. C. T. U. of Georgia is circulating and which it intends to make a mile long.

The Canton W. C. T. U. with Mrs. A. P. Bobo, Mrs. Joseph Johnson and Mrs. G. S. Hudson as officers; Mrs. A. M. McClure as president of the Cherokee county W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Olin Fincher as associate president of the Ninth district W. C. T. U., and that tireless active worker, Mrs. L. A. McClure, and others, have already secured 28 yards of signatures with 44 names to a yard in Canton, Waleska, Fairmount and other parts of Cherokee county.

Mrs. Chattain and Miss Chattain began getting signers by ones and twos and "kept on keeping on" until they added about 800 names to the petition.

Mrs. A. L. McClure, who secured many signatures wrote of them: "They deserve credit for the longest list, for they secured far more signatures of total abstainers than all of the other members combined."

Instead of sitting in a rocking chair fanning during the heat of the summer, they were busy circulating the petition in interest of civic righteousness and patriotism.

W. C. T. U. workers know that thinking and wishing for prohibition progress are all right as far as they go, but it takes earnest, persistent effort to get such worth-while results.

The Georgia W. C. T. U. bulletin publishes the number of yards filled by total abstainers from intoxicants with the places from which they are sent each month, and it is both interesting and gratifying to watch the steady advance toward the mile goal.

The W. C. T. U. invites other religious, patriotic, civic, philanthropic and educational organizations and groups desiring to have a part in securing a mile of names of non-drinkers, to order free yard sheets from Mrs. W. G. Cotton, Box 1146, Columbus, Ga., and fill and return the yards to her, to be added to those already mounted.

Those who saw only a part of the lists unrolled in Macon at the state convention in October say that it looks like a mile in length now.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, state W. C. T. U. president, will carry the mile petition for strict prohibition law enforcement, as it is called in the W. C. T. U., with her to the national convention in Detroit to be placed on exhibition.

Both the Missouri and Kentucky W. C. T. U. voted at their state W. C. T. U. conventions last month to adopt this plan of Georgia and will secure a mile of signatures of total abstainers in their respective states.

Life and Memorial Members.

The list of life members of the Georgia W. C. T. U. announced at the state convention last month were Mrs. A. W. McLarty, Douglasville; Mrs. M. G. Murray, Albany; Miss Jennie Carter, Newnan; William Alexander Mitchell, Gainesville; Mrs. Brantley Johnson, Macon; Colonel Sandy Beavers, Gainesville; W. C. Ham, Cairo; O. A. Carter, Gainesville, and Mrs. Jennie Sibley Lamb, Union Point.

The honor of memorial memberships were bestowed as follows:

Mrs. Buena Vista Stone, Milledgeville, by her daughter, Miss Ruth Stone; Mrs. Miller S. Bell, Milledgeville, by her husband, Miller S. Bell; Richard Whitfield Edwards, Ellaville, by his wife, Mrs. R. W. Edwards; Walter Florence Armor, Eastman, by his wife, Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, and his daughters, Mrs. D. D. Smith and Mrs. A. L. Hale; Mrs. C. H. Smith, Ellaville, by her daughters, Mrs. C. R. McCrory, Mrs. R. W. Edwards and Mrs. Addie S. Monroe; Mrs. W. O. Harrison, Cairo, by her husband, W. O. Harrison; Mrs. Hattie Woodson, Gainesville, by friends; Mrs. L. M. Casselly, Atlanta, by her daughter, Mrs. Earle Quillian.

To Open State Headquarters in Macon.

A suite of rooms in the Macon National Bank building have been secured through the aid of Macon business men, for state W. C. T. U. headquarters, which are to be opened early in December, with the state president, Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, in charge.

The tentative plans for the formal opening of the headquarters on the 15th of January include a prohibition rally of state-wide proportions in Macon's fine new city auditorium, to which every local W. C. T. U. and every city and town will be asked to send representatives.

The Hon. Gifford Gordon, noted Australian divine, who has spent many months on tour of inspection through the United States, studying conditions in regard to prohibition, will be the chief speaker. A number of distinguished people will be present and add to the interest of the occasion.

Mrs. Armor, who will preside, is arranging for a number of attractive features.

The W. C. T. U. will keep open house on the afternoon of the 15th and all-day on the 16th, at which time a dedicatory service will be held at the headquarters. All organizations and friends will be invited to call during the receiving hours. Some of the plans will be perfected before being made public. The occasion promises to be one long to be remembered, not only in Macon, but throughout the state.

College Park Music Club To Present Noted Musicians

The College Park Music club will hold its regular meeting on Wednesday afternoon at the College Park city auditorium at 3 o'clock and all members are urged to be on time.

The Music club is using the federation course of study, "From Song to Symphony," and the program for the afternoon will be "Opera and Oratorio," with Mrs. Frederic Beers, chairman.

Mrs. Beers will give a talk on "The Evolution of Opera" from the early Greek dramas to modern opera, with special reference to a comparison of the styles of Verdi and Wagner.

The following artists will be presented: Mrs. Hazel Harris Eaton will sing "Stride la Vampa," from Trovatore, with Miss Eloise Olds at the piano. Mrs. Florence Golson Bateman will sing "Ah fors e lui," from Traviata, with Mrs. Harry McGowen at the piano. Mrs. Hugh Couch will sing "Ave Maria," from Otello. Mrs. Effie Walker Slasman will illustrate the Oratorio feature of the program with "These Are They," by Gaul, and "Hear Ye, Isreal," from Elijan, by Mendelssohn.

The program will be augmented by a demonstration of the new Orthophonic phonograph, which will be of great interest to the club. All members are urged to attend.

Robert E. Lee, U. D. C., Meets In College Park

The Robert E. Lee chapter, U. D. C., College Park, met Tuesday, November 3, at 3:30 o'clock in the Methodist church. Dr. Irbv Henderson, pastor of the church, made the invocation.

After a brief business session the president, Mrs. R. L. Proctor, welcomed the three new members, Mrs. Earnest Henry Huff, Mrs. Reuben Arnold and Mrs. Eugene King, of Hapeville. Mrs. Heard (nee Findley), of Macon, was received as a new member.

Mrs. Stephenson, chairman for the afternoon, introduced Mrs. P. H. Jeter, of Decatur, as speaker. Mrs. Jeter is a most entertaining reader and gave great pleasure to her audience. By request she gave a concise report of the late convention at Sandersville. The chapter went on record in October as indorsing the sale of memorial coins. Two hundred have been sold through chapter activities and the chapter will handle the remainder of College Park's quota. The chapter has the indorsement of business men, bankers, ministers and all citizens of College Park in this undertaking. Enthusiasm was also manifested in the president's plan to deliver "Service crosses" to College Park world war heroes on the Sunday afternoon preceding Memorial day.

Mrs. Marjorie Olds Jacobs, accompanied by Miss Eloise Olds, gave a group of songs and received sincere thanks and applause. The social hour was presided over by Mrs. Lilly Mandeville Love.

Woman's Auxiliary Central Presbyterian.

The Woman's auxiliary of the Central Presbyterian church held its regular monthly meeting Monday afternoon at the church. "Christian Social Service" was the subject for discussion and many helpful suggestions about this work were presented.

Miss Mary Burruss led the devotional making a strong plea for more workers in the church at home and pointing out the fact that Christ was a home missionary.

Miss Ada Woolfolk, of the family welfare workers, gave a very interesting outline of the work being done in this association and stressed the urgent need of cooperation of all the organizations working for the uplift of humanity.

Miss Goldie Pugh delighted the members with a beautiful violin solo, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Stovghill.

Mrs. W. U. Cotton's circle won the blue ribbon for the largest per cent of attendance.

Mrs. L. Weddell had an array of gifts on display which had been made by her circle as a Thanksgiving offering to the old ladies in the almshouse. The gifts included caps, aprons, footwarmers, scarfs, fancy bags and other pretty and useful articles. There were also handkerchiefs for the men which had been very kindly donated by an Atlanta firm.

A new and practical feature of the auxiliary is the nursery which is in charge of Mrs. I. R. Carlisle and Mrs. T. A. Clayton. This affords the mothers with small children an opportunity of attending the meeting. Six new members were present.

Camp Fire Girls Give Benefit Party.

The Camp Fire Girls of Bolton gave a beautiful heart dice party at the community hall Thursday. The hall was decorated throughout with Halloween colors.

The receiving committee included Miss Theresa Hamby and Catherine Chambers. During the afternoon tea was served by Misses Frances York, Jeffie York and Dorothy Rogers. On the entertaining committee were Misses Virginia Donehoo, Margaret Rogers and Louise Carter.

The prizes were won by Mrs. Homer Wilson and Miss Ruby Hudson. Those present were Miss Mae Carmichael, Mrs. Homer Wilson, Mrs. J. Allison, Mrs. L. C. York, Miss Inez Woodall, Mrs. Bruce Brannon, Mrs. J. V. Carmichael, Mrs. Jake Matthieson, Mrs. Norman Brown, Mrs. Homer McDonald, Mrs. Myers Hughes, Mrs. Guy Hodgins, Miss Ruby Hudson, Mrs. Folger, Mrs. Will Mauldin and Miss Louise Williamson, their guardian.

Druid Hills Club To Give Carnival.

The Business Girls' club of the Druid Hills Presbyterian church will give a carnival at the church on Friday, November 13, beginning at 4 o'clock and continuing through the afternoon and evening. There will be all sorts of stunts and sideshows for your amusement. Popcorn, cold drinks, wieners, peanuts and balloons. A regular circus! No general admission charge, but pennies and nickels pay admissions into the various booths.

Emory Sigma Chi Fraternity Entertains.

On Sunday evening the Emory chapter of Sigma Chi entertained a few friends at its home on North Decatur road. A delightful supper was served at 6:30 o'clock, after which followed a small social gathering in the reception room.

The guests were: Miss Margaret Hunt, Miss Martha Powell, Miss Virginia Deering, Miss Cornelia Taylor, Miss Kitty Park, Miss Rebecca Skeen, Miss Louise Capin, Miss Mary Moritz and Miss Josephine Clarke.

OBSERVANCE of armistice day 2col

Dear Madam Regent: At our state conference, April, 1921, a resolution was passed making Armistice day an observance day in our Georgia society, D. A. R. I am asking you to observe it befittingly and to place if possible a red poppy on the grave of every world war soldier buried in your midst.

I would suggest when convenient to have public exercises at your school building where the children and the public may learn what "Armistice Day" means to all.

Please report to me as early after November 11 as you possibly can so that I may be able to have a full report for our state meeting.

I am counting on every chapter in the state to obseve this day of all days—one not to be forgotten by the whole country, and especially our loyal Daughters of the American Revolution. Cordially yours,

MRS. C. E. PITTMAN,
State Chm. Armistice Day,
Commerce, Ga.

ATTENTION CHAPTER REGENTS

At our last conference I presented a volume of Georgia rosters, and I very much desired to finish a second volume before our next conference.

Without your help I cannot do this, so please send your chapter roster at once (if it has not been previously sent). Have it typed an paper 11x 8 1-2 inches, with good margin to left for binding. Include national number, name in full of member, with husband's initials; names of ancestors and the states they served.

Do not fold or crease paper.

I feel that the completion of this work is most important, so please do not fail me.

Thanking you for your loyalty in the past and assuring you that I am ready to serve you at any time. I am faithfully,

MARTHA EDMONDSON,
State Chm. Lineage Books and Chapter Rosters.

REAL DAUGHTERS.

The state chairman on real daughters, Mrs. Walker Jordan, of Hawkinsville, Ga., is trying to locate the graves of the following real daughters.

Please write her if you know where any of these women are buried; she will appreciate the information:

Mrs. Elizabeth Bass Smith, Jefferson, Clay county, Georgia; daughter of Henry Smith and his wife, Melissa Norris.

Mrs. Clarissa Hefner, 17 Crew street, Atlanta, Ga.; daughter of William Jones and his wife, Elizabeth Martin.

Mrs. Sarah D. West Mathews, Columbus, Ga.; daughter of Benjamin West and his wife, Sarah Dinkins.

Mrs. Ruth Dobbs Maddox, Flowery Branch, Ga.; daughter of Nathan Dobbs and his wife, Fanny Young.

Mrs. Mary Thompson Story, Newnan, Ga.; daughter of Andrew Thompson and his wife, Mary McBride.

MRS TALMADGE HONORED.

One of the most elegant entertainments in the history of the social life of Toccoa was the luncheon given by the D. A. R. October 8, in honor of the state regent, Mrs. Julius Talmadge.

The beautiful colonial home of Mrs. J. W. Marks, regent of the Toccoa chapter, was a fit setting for this patriotic occasion, and the color scheme of red, white and blue was most appropriate.

Mrs. Marks most charmingly delivered the address of welcome to the distinguished guest. Toasts were offered by Mrs. George Allen and Mrs. Mary Jarrett White, which was responded to by Mrs. Talmadge in her usual gracious manner.

The Georgia D. A. R. are, indeed, fortunate in having a representative so well equipped in every respect as is Mrs. Talmadge for the high office she holds.

At the suggestion of Mrs. C. E. Mitchell the Toccoa chapter indorsed her for vice president general of the national society.

After a rendition of patriotic music by Miss Dity Ramay, the chapter listened to an interesting address by Mrs. Talmadge.

TENNILLE CHAPTER.

The regular meeting of the Major General Samuel Elbert chapter was held on Friday afternoon at the home of the regent, Mrs. W. H. Colgate.

A sum was voted for student aid work of the state. A committee was appointed to affiliate with other organizations in local school improvement. A committee was also appointed to unite with others in observance of Armistice day. A letter from the war department stated that a marker would be sent for the grave of David Clayton.

THRONATEESKA CHAPTER.

With Mrs. R. L. Jones as regent, the Thronateeska chapter, D. A. R., entered with brilliant prospects upon the thirtieth year of its existence when the initial meeting of the year was held at "Iris Court," the beautiful year was held at "Iris Court," the beautiful home of Mrs. John Randolph Whitehead, Friday afternoon.

The occasion was the celebrating of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the national organization, the observance of Magna Charta and Constitution day and LaFayette day.

The chapter voted to meet all the national and state obligations. An S. A. R. citizenship was offered to the boy at high school making the best all-round record.

During the social hour an exquisite birthday cake illuminated with 35 candles was brought in by honorary regent for life, Mrs. Whitehead, who was attired in colonial period style, lavender satin trimmed in flounces and bertha of rose point lace.

Temple Sisterhood Holds Meeting.

The Temple Sisterhood held its regular monthly meeting Monday afternoon, November 2, at the Pryor Street temple.

After the business of the association was dispensed with, the ladies enjoyed a very delightful program in commemoration of Thanksgiving. Mrs. Ernst Morwitz, president of the sisterhood, played the part of Father Time and recited verses written by Miss Beatrice Holzman, to show the evolution of Thanksgiving through the ages. The verses were illustrated by charming groups of young people who formed pictures to represent the rite of Thanksgiving from Biblical days when the "first fruits" were given the poor up to our modern celebration of turkey and football.

The young people who acted in the pictures were assisted by David Steinheimer, who played the Patriarch; Mrs. Max Samuels, who rendered appropriate piano selections to accompany the tableaux, and Sam Prodger, promising young violinist, who began the program by showing that thanks is well expressed in music.

Dean Johnston Will Address Atlanta Woman's Club Members

The Atlanta Woman's club will present the second number of the series of lectures on world relations Monday afternoon, when Dean T. H. Johnston will address the members on "Russia of Today," as the subject. Dean Johnston, rector of St. Philip's Episcopal church, is conceded to be one of the most interesting speakers in the city, and will be one of six prominent citizens of Atlanta to present a subject during this interesting series conducted by the woman's club.

Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the club, will preside over the meeting and introduce the speakers. Business will be dispatched as rapidly as possible and the greatest part of the meeting will be given to entertainment and instruction.

A beautiful musical program has been arranged by the club music chairman, Mrs. Mary Griffith Dobbs, which will include several delightful harp selections by Mrs. Dobbs, one of Atlanta's most talented and finisned artists in music; a group of vocal numbers by Preston H. Epps, baritone soloist at the First Baptist church of this city, and who has held this position for several years. Mr. Epps is assistant principal of Boys' High school, where he has had an opportunity of manifesting his splendid civic spirit through the organization and direction of te Boys' High school orchestra.

Miss Iris B. Jarrell, a beautiful dancer, will interpret one of Mrs. Mary Griffith Dobbs' harp selections with the lovely fan dance. Miss Jarrell is especially graceful in her interpretative dances, having been a pupil for some time of Ruth St. Dennis and Ted Shaw. She was also a pupil of Fokine and Forkina and spent a year of study at the Dennis-Shaen studio in New York. Miss Jarrell is at present the director of physical training at Washington seminary.

The president of the club, Mrs. Norman Sharp, urges the members of the club to attend this delightful meeting Monday and enjoy the splendid message that Dean Johnston will bring and to hear the exquisite music Mrs. Dobbs has arranged.

City Beautiful Committee To Meet.

The next meeting of the city beautiful committee, led by the civic department of the Atlanta Woman's club, with Mrs. T. G. Delph, chairman, will meet at the clubhouse Thursday morning, November 12, at 10:30 o'clock.

A very enthusiastic meeting was held recently by this committee, which was the initial gathering of the forces for a more beautiful Atlanta, with clean streets, additional trash containers, smoke abatement and planting of trees crusade. It is the purpose of this central committee to arouse the interest of all organizations in this work and in an effort to get everyone busy trying to make this the most beautiful city in the country.

Mrs. T. G. Delph, as chairman, is assisted by Mrs. C. T. Wilson, acting as secretary for the committee. The organizations were represented as follows: Chamber of Commerce, George W. West; Junior Chamber, H. F. Upshaw and I. M. Sheffield, Jr.; women's division of the Chamber of Commerce, Mrs. R. L. Turman; American Legion, R. Frank Calloway; city sanitary department, W. E. Saunders; City Federation, Mrs. Cleve Webb; Fifth District Federated clubs, Mrs. E. M. Helbig; Atlanta P.-T. A., Mrs. Raymond Wolfe; West End Civic club, Mrs. Roger Lively; Kirkwood Woman's club, Mrs. A. I. Branham; West End Woman's club, Mrs. J. W. Young and Mrs. C. T. Knight; Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the Atlanta Woman's club.

Alliance Francaise At "Wingfield."

Announcement is made that "Wingfield," the home of ex-Governor and Mrs. J. M. Slaton, will be the scene of an evening surprise party in honor of L'Alliance Francaise and other French-speaking friends at an early date.

Mrs. Slaton is first vice president of the alliance, and the entertainment will be distinctly "French-y" and artistic in every detail.

St. Mark Circle To Meet Monday.

Circle No. 10, St. Mark's Methodist church, will meet Monday afternoon, November 9, at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Lawton Miller at 8 Cornell road. The members are reminded that at this meeting articles for the Wesley Memorial hospital will be collected.

Mrs. Anne Bates Walsh, chairman of the circle, requests all members to attend.

To the Georgia Clubwomen Of the Seventh District

The beginning of the club year is here and I trust that to each one of you it brings renewed health and interest in your year's work. The past summer has been unusually hard, and it is possible that your plans are not wholly formed, but there are certain things to be done at once.

First, get your club machinery in order. Pay your dues and your other club obligations as soon as possible. In other words, "clear the deck for action." You will enjoy the remainder of the year much more.

Send all moneys to Mrs. B. F. Lowther, Cedartown.

I should advise making separate checks and marking each one plainly—"dues," "Tallulah school," "Ella F. White memorial," and so on.

The executive board will meet at the Forrest hotel in Rome on November 18. There will be no social features and a day of business and the informal discussion of club needs will be the order. Please try to be present.

New clubs have federated since our regular meeting in May—the Felthonian of Taylorsville, the Civic league of Eton and the Woman's club of Kennesaw.

As your president I have enjoyed three very delightful club occasions during the summer—a luncheon and club meeting at Marietta, an afternoon with the Dallas club, and a day at Chatsworth, where a drive to the "Chief Vann house," a lovely luncheon and an enthusiastic club meeting marked the day.

Remember to send your local paper to our very able press chairman, Miss Belle Bayless, Kingston.

With best wishes for each of you personally, and for your club, I am

Cordially yours,
(MRS. OSCAR T.) LOUIS MUNFORD PEEPLES,
President of the Seventh District G. F. W. C.

Bartow County Federation Holds Interesting Meeting

BY BELL BAYLESS,
Seventh District Press Chairman.

The joke was on the weather man Saturday. By frowning skies and chilling winds he tried to bluff the women of Bartow, but he didn't know 'em, for when the gavel fell and Mrs. Irby Sheats, president of the Bartow County Federation, called the fifth annual convention to order that morning, 28 delegates and 14 visitors, representing 17 organizations, with a membership of 937 women, had assembled in the auditorium of the Kingston High school, together with members of the History club, P.-T. A., Baptist and Methodist missionary societies, joint hostesses. These with other organizations not represented brings the total up to a thousand.

Seated on the platform, which was attractively furnished and decorated with ferns, boughs of autumn leaves and chrysanthemums, were that veteran clubwoman, United States Senator Rebecca Latimer Felton; Mrs. J. Lindsay Johnson, ex-president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Oscar T. Peeples, president of the seventh district, state chairman of rural schools, G. F. W. C., and founder of the Bartow County Federation; Mrs. M. E. Judd, state chairman of conservation, G. F. W. C.; Mrs. Claude Irby, ex-president of the seventh district and president of the History club; Mrs. Tanner Lowry, vice president of the Bartow County Federation; Mrs. Herbert Hague, president of the Cobb County Federation; Mrs. J. C. Milner, president of the Cherokee club; Rev. W. A. Simmons, pastor of the Methodist church; Harold J. Matthews, State Board of Public Welfare, and Miss Anne Gallagher, State Board of Health.

After an appropriate invocation by Rev. Simmons, followed by singing of the federation song, "We Are a Band of Women With a Vision Clear, We Trust," Mrs. Irby welcomed the visitors in her usual cordial manner and because of their expressed admiration for Kingston's new school building, especially the handsome large auditorium, explained that the woman's part had been its furnishing of opera seats costing $600, from the History club; handsomely painted stage drop curtain costing $125; window shades and draperies, pictures, sanitary water coolers, as well as pump and concrete foundation for the well, at least $500 more.

Mrs. G. B. Hulme, president of the P.-T. A. and Methodist Missionary society, added a brief welcome full of sincerity.

Then, on behalf of the most important people in Kingston, the children, little Helen Henderson gave the "welcomest welcome" of them all.

Mrs. J. C. Milner responded to these greetings, expressing th appreciation of the guests, and illustrating her remarks with comparisons from Esthonia, a country one-third the size of Georgia, with two-thirds as many inhabitants, just waking up to its new freedom and seizing its opportunities for education. Development, Mrs. Milner quoted, is cultivating such cultural opportunities as are best suited to the soil on which we dwell. She also stressed the value of music, especially community singing.

Mrs. Sheats' Report.

Mrs. Sheats gave, as president's report, the writing of more than 50 letters and as many more cards during the year, several trips to Cartersville to confer with the vice president, as well as arranging for the present convention, the printed programs for which were the gift of Mrs. Lowry. Brushing aside all flowery compliments, she faced conditions in Bartow county as they are today. Taking first the schools, with 70 white schools and 120 teachers, and 6,232 children of school age, she asked why 1,234 failed to enter last year, and why so many failed to make their grade. It is one of the tragedies of education, said she, that any child should be allowed to fail. The blame rests not on the child, but on the parents and the teachers. Why are there no Bibles in the schools, demanded she, and why is not a chapter read every day, as called for by law? She stressed the importance of writing the history of Bartow county, of having it printed, even in pamphlet form, and insisting on it being taught in the public schools of the county. Bartow county, with an annual income of $150,000, is $262,000 in debt, while neighboring counties, Cobb, Polk and Whitfield have money in the bank Why? Bartow hills are filled with minerals. Yes, and with stills from which liquor is sent down and sold even to boys and girls. These things must be overcome. It is the solid phalanx that repulses an enemy, she finished. "Women of Bartow, shun not your duty. Face it."

Mrs. Felton Speaks.

The most important woman in America then rose, on invitation, and delivered her message to the assembly. 'Twas hard to realize, as Mrs. Felton's voice rose clear and strong, audible to the far corners of the auditorium, that she had passed her ninetieth birthday, nor that she had come alone to this federation meeting, braving inclement weather and democratically riding on the Dixie "bus." The women rose to greet her, and again as she closed, as a mark of appreciation and respect.

Mrs. Felton recalled the first days of women's activities in Georgia, as early as 1890, and in 1894, when, with others, she became a clubwomen, during the year of the Cotton States exposition.

She recalled her first visit to Kingston 72 years ago, when she came to Cass county as a bride, and again to a school rally a decade ago, in the building since destroyed by fire, and complimented the people on their new convenient meeting place. Woman in the home is good, remarked she, and just as good wherever else you put her. Mrs. Felton believes the surest cure for present day lawlessness lies in mother love and care within the home.

Mrs. J. Lindsay Johnson paid a beautiful tribute to Mrs. Felton, whom she first met in Washington, "when she was in congress." For Mrs. Felton was in congress years before she entered the senate," declared Mrs. Johnson, who then took up her topic: "Our Country, Her Prosperity and Her Dangers." In spite of local conditions, the unprecedented drouth that so injured crops in this section, the country as a whole has splendid crops and business conditions are improving. We must learn how to bear prosperity in the right way, the strong way. But of dangers there are not a few, and women must be alert to counterbalance them. Unwise legislation, the fee system, Russian communists endeavoring to take charge of our country, even organizing the negroes, study the courts. The prohibition law must be respected and enforced for the good of all, whatever one's personal opinions and preferences. A bootlegger's chances for conviction must be more than 50-50. Mrs. Johnson is a forceful speaker, one who always knows her subject before she expresses an opinion. She has been more than good to Kingston in times past, and her visits are always highly appreciated.

Mrs. Hague brought a message from the Cobb county federation, the only other federated county in the seventh district. She told of cooperating with the 68 rural schools, especially the helpfulness of sponsoring them, encouraging the teachers, cooperating with county health workers and welfare boards. She spoke with satisfaction of the recent fair put on by the clubwomen, an undertaking indeed, but the clubwomen won't see another clubwoman fail," Mrs. Hague declared that since coming to Kingston she had changed her slogan from "It's great to Be From Cobb County, to It's Great to Be a Georgian," as Bartow had shown her what another county could do.

It speaks volumes for the importance of this federation occupies that the state welfare board and the state board of health should each send a representative from Atlanta to address the meeting.

Harold J. Matthews gave some enlightening facts regarding underprivileged children, social problems, particularly the indigent in alms houses. Mr. Matthews has visited Bartow's county farm. He urged the desirability of employing a trained social worker who by visiting the homes, studying conditions and making adjustments can frequently have these paupers cared for outside of an institution at less expense to the county. The keeping of families together particularly children with their mother, rousing others to helping themselves instead of depending on charity is an important feature.

Mrs. Judd Speaks.

Like a breath from the Orient, from whence she recently returned, Mrs. Judd brought a fresh subject, the importance of forestry, the conservation of our forests, reforestation, fire protection, the galloping approach of a lumber famine in the United States because of wastefulness in the past as well as the present which in ten years has doubled the cost of building a home. The destruction of magnificent forests to replace them with crops, on land unfit to be cultivated, that soon washes away, leaving nothing but gullied hillsides, or planting peach orchards, soon neglected, instead of wisely culling the timber, mining the forests instead of cutting them with judgment and a regard for the future. She cited the devastation around Mukden, China, once a forest section but now a treeless waste, with not even a chance to come back. There are five million acres of such forest land in Georgia, according to Mrs. Judd. What irony for us to send tree seeds to Belgium and France after the war, and ourselves burn over the land, destroying seeds and now growth! From 1632, when the first shipload of pine was shipped from New England to the mother country, lumber has been one of America's leading products, but now not even California produces enough for its needs. Naval stores bleed even the baby trees for turpentine. Why not replant such land with slash pine which, mixed with gum, makes such fine book paper? Pennsylvania has started a great program of reforestation. Why not Georgia? One such at least is being carried out by a man near Blairsville who is guarding 50,000 acres of mountain forests for future generations. Mrs. Judd's hearers were so impressed that more than ever will they deplore the reckless cutting of trees in Bartow county, instead of wise use if what little timber is left. What can women do to prevent if men, especially property owners, sanction such vandalism?

The federation's songbird, Mrs. A. B. Conyus, emphasized the value and beauty and sentiment connected with our forests by singing "Into the Woods My Master Went," accompanied by Mrs. Paul Dyer. Miss Anne L. Gallagher, director public health nursing, Atlanta, after expressing her opinion of Dr. Joe A. Bowdoin, of Adairsville, in charge of work of the state board of health, gave an explanation of the work of a public health nurse who went into the homes, instructed the mothers, examined the children, cared for those who had no assistance, working with children of pre-school age. How such care was instrumental in prevention, if not cure, in many cases of disease such as diphtheria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases. She told how government assistance might be obtained, on a 50-50 basis, so such a nurse would not cost more than $1,200 a year, a small sum compared with the loss of a life, or permanent injury to a child. In fact, her talk was filled with just such information as the federation desired to hear, and to disseminate throughout the county.

Mrs. Peeples told of organizing the county federation, also suggested ways to make Bartow more beautiful was to have a spirit more beautiful which would soon point the way to material things, good roads, clearing fields and hedgerows adjacent to the highways, planting trees on such property, making school grounds attractive, teaching the children to attract the birds—those friends of the farmer, build bird houses; offering premiums for the best house, standing squarely behind the county home demonstrator in her work. Mrs. Peeples offered a motion, which was carried, that the commissioners be urged to build a uniform style of culverts and small bridges, which would, by their symmetrical appearance, be a good advertisement for Bartow.

Quite a treat was the song, "Georgia Land," sung by Mrs. Hulme, who has a sweet voice, accompanied by Mrs. Dyer. The music was Mrs. Dyer's own composition, a lilting melody admirably adapted for school and community singing. Kingston is proud of this talented musician. Several new organizations were then welcomed. Oothcaloga chapter, D. A. R., Adairsville; Business and Professional Women's club, Cartersville; Five Forks Community club, Taylorsville P.-T. A., Civic club, Missionary society, Stilesboro. They were welcomed before the recess hour, during which the visitors were entertained at luncheon in the New Kingston hotel.

Proprietor W. T. Bryan had made gay the lobby and long dining room with garlands and festoons in Halloween colors, orange and black, strips of crepe paper checked in those colors overlaid the table linen beneath the plates, pumpkins filled with white grapes and vases of orange flowers adorned the tables, and bright autumn leaves served for favors, in addition to the appropriate tags pinned on each guest, the gift of Mrs. Sheats. The whole effect was of brightness, further set off by electric lights having orange shades. Seated at the end table the officers and specially invited guests, delegates and hostesses being at others placed at right angles to this, 87 being served, and enjoying a delicious four-course luncheon, consisting of fruit cocktail, an exceptionally nice salad, plates filled with substantials, block ice cream and cake, both carrying out the color scheme, orange and black, finishing with black coffee.

Mrs. Irby Is Toastmistress.

Mrs. Irby, as toastmistress, called on the following members who responded with these quaint toasts:

Mrs. Sheats: "Our guests and our host."

Mrs. Jack Hill: "In Georgia's a county called Bartow, where you raise any crop that you want to, minerals and ores, her hills doth afford, this wonderful county named Bartow."

Mrs. Henry Jolly: "Here's to our Senatoress! While the next may be allowed to serve longer, we will never receive more attention and notoriety than has our own Rebecca Latimer Felton, United States Senator from Georgia."

Miss Dell Headden: "B stands for Bartow; also for boost, better homes, better schools, better roads, better youths."

Miss Campie Hawkins: "Here's to the Tribune. May it come each Friday noon filled with news, not blues, throughout the year."

Mrs. N. C. Anderson:
"Here's to the man who is wisest and best,
Here's to the man whose judgment is best,
Here's to the man who's as smart as can be,
I mean the man who agrees with me."

Mrs. Johnson:
"The world is filled with flowers,
The flowers are filled with dew,
The dew is filled with love,
For you, fair Louie, for you."

Miss Bayless, "To one the Kingston women delight to honor, the second president of the state federation, Mrs. J. Lindsay Johnson."

Mrs. O. R. Bishop, "From over the sea she came, Hague is her name. She's creating great admiration as head of Cobb county federation."

Mrs. Paul Akin, "Here's to the future of our organization. May it grow in power and usefulness every year."

Mrs. Peeples, "Here's to Mrs. Judd. She's no dud. A live wire, full of pep to the lid. In London and in Paris she oft roved the streets, in bus, cab, tram, and even rickashaw. Her garden is her pride, filled with flowers, which beside smelling sweet, take prizes at the fair."

Reassembling at 2:30, the program was continued. Miss Dowdy, county home demonstrator, began by saying, "as citizens we are what our homes make us," and outlined the course she hopes to pursue for the betterment of the homes and schools of the county.

Mrs. Lowry read the report of the health chairman, Mrs. Bob McGinnis.

Mrs. J. W. L. Brown, chairman of legislation, gave some valuable data as to registered women voters, totaling 895 in the county. She suggested that if women were taxed for staying away from the polls they might not be so indifferent, and hinted that some husbands refused to pay their wives poll tax.

Mrs. Mary Ella Johnson's report on the Pauper farm, read by Miss H. L. Hargis, was enlightening and somewhat encouraging as it told of a few improvements that had been made. It will be published in full at a later date. Mrs. Johnson resigned as chairman, and Mrs. Lowry, who has done good work for the unfortunates at the farm, was appointed in her place. A vote of thanks was given Mrs. Johnson for her report, and regret that she could not be present to read it.

Mrs. Peeples' good roads report was largely embodied in her morning address. She spoke of the organizing of the Business and Professional Women's club, the report of which will be published later.

Mrs. Gunyus, representing W. C. T. U., urged the singing of prohibition songs, illustrating with one specially appropriate, and advocated keeping representatives informed as to how we wish them to vote.

Mrs. Irby brought forward the project of sponsoring a memorial to the world war soldiers, proposed by the History club, by placing bronze tablets bearing names of our boys on a concrete bridge to be built across the Etowah river south of Cartersville, the only Dixie highway bridge crossing a river in Bartow county. This movement met with universal favor, as it gives the federation a definite aim, something of general interest and importance that will make the boys realize that their work and sacrifice are recognized and appreciated by their home people.

Mrs. Irby was elected permanent chairman and instructed to select her own committee.

Mrs. Sheats announced that Mrs. Clifford Walker had been invited to speak to the P.-T. A., but was unable to be present. Mrs. Walker's letter of regret was received too late for another speaker equally authoritative on the subject to be secured, though the two from Atlanta had given much information along that line.

Missionary work was not touched upon specifically, all club work being in that category, undenominationally.

Mrs. J. Lindsay Johnson and Mrs. Hague thanked the women of Kingston for the good day they had so much enjoyed.

Reading of club reports and minutes of the meeting was dispensed with because of lateness of the hour and inclement weather which must be braved on the way home, but so much valuable and informative data had been laid before the convention the reports can await publication, when they will be broadcasted over the county. They should be sent to the secretary.

The following resolutions were adopted and the meeting stood adjourned at 4 o'clock.

Resolutions Read.

Resolutions, read by Mrs. J. N. McKelvey, Mrs. Campie Hawkins, Mrs. E. O. Davis, Mrs. J. J. Hill, committee:

Resolved, that our county school superintendent, in his selection of teachers, give preference to those who attend summer school; that one or more women be placed on every school board in the county; that steps be taken by all school boards to enforce the compulsory school law; that we extend thanks to the Bartow County Tribune-News and its staff correspondent, Miss Bayless, for help and cooperation in bringing the work of the federation before the public; that the Bartow County federation protests the singling out of this county by the Georgia legislature and The Atlanta Constitution for reproof and criticism about the highway through Bartow. This county has accomplished too much, contributed too much to the state to be made the target for abuse; that the Bartow County federation advocates and urges the uniform style of culverts and small bridges; that the Bartow County federation as opposing the exportation of the marvelous historical relics recently found in the prehistoric mounds near Cartersville and other points in Georgia, and requests the governor to take some immediate action on the question; that this organization indorses the movement of League of Women Voters, requesting that one cent be paid in money to boxes provided at every voting precinct this fund to be used for advancement of citizenship and legislation, the same to be accounted for to legislative appointee from this organization.

Dalton Woman's Club Conducts Tea Room.

The Dalton Woman's club has an interesting and practical scheme of making money by conducting a tea-room every Saturday at the Robin's Nest. The plan has grown in popularity until now the tearoom is the center of the social life of the progressive Georgia town.

Started as an experiment four years ago when Frank Pruden so generously tendered the use of the rooms over his office to the Woman's club the venture from the beginning has been a success, socially and financially.

The revenue derived from the parties has enabled the club to aid in many needed civic improvements, among which was installing hot water at Fort Hill school, making repairs in Maples Memorial rest room and later paying part of the money needed to acquire a home for Alton public library.

The equipment of silver, tables and linen is owned by the club and recently the chairs and tables have been deorated in cream and robin's egg blue, flowered draperies hung, electric fans installed and the inviting living room and dining room of the club made quite comfortable and attractive.

The success of the tearoom has been due to the untiring energy and efficiency of the chairman, Mrs. J. A. Crawford, and the assistance given her by every woman in the club, and the patronage of the public.

Each week a different committee takes charge. Every chairman strives to make her afternoon the most enjoyable and profitable.

Sixth District President Sends Greetings to Clubwomen

Mrs. L. C. Warren, president of the sixth district G. F. W. C., whose greetings appear on today's club page. Photograph by Thurston Hatcher.

BY MRS. L. C. WARREN,
Sixth District President.

"Smile, sing, and serve," is the slogan for the sixth.

We frequently hear that the clubs have fulfilled their mission in many places, and such diligence is no longer necessary.

How shall we answer this? When the individuals in every home are living in ideal conditions; when the health of every child is safeguarded against disease and crime; when every woman finds life an Eden of happiness; when every community is a place of beauty and flowers bloom where weeds were wont to grow; when exquisite music and inspiring literature are the daily diet chosen by every citizen in the community; when the laws no longer need revision, and reverence for all things beautiful and worth while becomes a universal habit, then the club will have finished their task.

If we can get the vision of big things and follow our chosen leaders with enthusiastic interest, the months of the coming year will find each member rarely enriched from personal contact with those of high ideals and like problems, and in culture and strength which three million women can give shall belong to each one of us and the strength of the whole shall be mine; and in many lives, the "desert shall blossom as the rose."

It is a wonderful privilege to get and give; when the ideals and culture of Georgia's fairest cities may be shared with the tiniest village; and when the children of every home may reap the benefits of the highest ideals of Georgia's most wonderful women.

Greetings to every club in the sixth, and cheers as you "carry on."

Your new district president,
LOUISE ROSSER WARREN.

Tribute Is Paid Georgia Clubwoman

There are some women with whom we may come in contact with only occasionally and yet whose impression is so lasting that the smile, the look from their eyes, or the tones of their voices are never forgotten. Such is the memory of Mabel Cortelyou, of Marietta. I shall never forget the exquisite voice, nor her straight look when she made you a promise. It was her word, and her smile sealed it.

She had been interested in state and district library work for years, and no doubt she has sent books to many a lowly home and made the yearning hearts of many children happy, as chairman of library extension in this district.

The seventh district has sustained a great loss in her passing, and every club will join me in deepest sympathy to those who knew her best and loved her most.

MRS. OSCAR T. PEEPLES,
President of Seventh District of the Georgia Federation.

Doerun Club Selects "Georgia" As Subject.

"Nor shall your glory be forgot
While Fame her records keeps
Or Honor paints the hallowed spots
Where Valor proudly sleeps."

With the above motto penned by Theodore Ohara, the Doerun Woman's club gave a program on "Georgia, the Empire State of the South," with Mrs. W. M. Smith presiding.

The following program was rendered: Song, "Georgia Land;" prayer, Mrs. W. Y. Hunt; poem, "Song of the Chattahoochee," Lanier, by Mrs. E. M. Fain; "Georgia's Men and Women of the Past," Mrs. Frank Smith; "Georgia's Men and Women of the Present," Mrs. W. Y. Hunt; "Georgia Variety of Products," Mrs. O. L. Bush.

Each number was rendered with unusual merit, giving excellent and interesting information concerning our own state of Georgia.

J. C. Moore, superintendent of Doerun high school, was present. When given an opportunity to speak to the club he stressed the necessity of cooperation between the Woman's club and the school. He also expressed his appreciation of the former work of the club and pledged his support to any of its undertakings.

Mesdames G. E. Flemming, Z. T. Millsap, Charles Roberts and Arthur Chalkley were gracious hostesses, entertaining at the lovely home of Mrs. Flemming. Halloween idea was prominent in the decorations and refreshments.

Montezuma Club Issues Invitations.

The Woman's club of Montezuma has issued invitations to the thirteenth annual meeting of Third District Convention of Women's Clubs to be held at Woman's clubhouse Tuesday and Wednesday, November 17 and 18. Mrs. B. E. Neal, president; Mrs. C. E. Reid, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. Brantley Attends Second District Meet.

Mrs. A. P. Brantley, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, was among the distinguished guests at the second district meeting held at Cairo on November 4 and 5.

Seventh District Executive Board Meets in Rome Nov. 18

The executive board of the Seventh District federation is called to meet in Rome at the Forrest hotel on November 18 promptly at 10 o'clock in the morning. There will be two sessions, morning and afternoon, with a subscription luncheon at 1 o'clock.

Mrs. A. P. Brantly, president of the state federation; Mrs. John K. Ottley, president of the board of trustees of the Tallulah Falls school; Mrs. J. Lindsay Johnson and Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, ex-presidents of the state federation, and other distinguished clubwomen have expressed their intention to be present. The sessions will be confined to the business of the seventh district.

The executive board is composed of district officers, district ex-presidents, chairmen of standing committees and the president or vice president of every federated club in the district.

All members of the various clubs in Rome, whether federated or not, are cordially invited to be present and meet the visiting clubwomen.

Members of the board are requested to send a reply to Miss Emma Crabb, corresponding secretary, Rockmart, Ga.

(Signed) MRS. OSCAR T. PEEPLES,
President of the District.
MISS EMMA CRABB, Corresponding Secretary.

Twenty-Second Infantry Gives Scholarship to Tallulah

A mountain boy will receive an education this year at Georgia Federation's school as the result of the interest of the Twenty-second infantry polo team in this work of Americanization.

The scholarship will bear the name of the regiment and be formally known as the Twenty-second infantry scholarship.

Especially interested in the scholarship have been Colonel Ryther, General Eltinge, Captain Bolling, Captain W. A. Cunningham and the polo team and athletic association.

Lawrenceville Junior Club Praised by Mrs. T. A. Smith

By Mrs. T. A. Smith, ninth district junior club chairman:

In reply to a request from our publicity chairman for a report on the activities of the Lawrenceville Junior club, will say that during the time that this club has been organized and federated (1923, a little over two years ago) it has accomplished many worthwhile things. It has the distinction of being the first Junior club in the ninth district and also the first of its kind in the state, as it was organized before the state chairman for Junior clubs gave to us her outline for junior work, and since which time we have included in our list the younger set, the Camp-fire Girls, the older girls carrying out as near as they can the work assigned the senior clubs both for the community and state.

Training School.

The Junior club is a training school for our future club women, club women who will be more familiar with the vital issues of the day and better prepared to meet and better qualified to handle these future problems that will necessarily confront our future club women. This club was organized for service, and will always stand for the betterment of conditions relating to the home, the child, the school and the community, and along these lines they have rendered valuable aid. This club has been very prompt and liberal in the many obligations of the federation, both state and general; besides, they contribute annually $5 to the maintenance fund for Tallulah Falls Industrial school, and also gave $25 for the drive last summer for greater Tallulah; the sponsor, with help from the juniors and Woman's club, sent to the school from a towel shower 45 lovely towels which were so graciously received by the principal, Miss Nannie Davis.

On Armistice day the girls made and sold poppies amounting to something over $20. They gave to the equipment fund of the new public school here $35 to be used to help pay for the stage curtain for the auditorium.

Last fall the club sponsored one of the largest flower shows that has ever been held in Lawrenceville and was hostess on this occasion to about 75 ladies of the town and county.

When the ninth district annual convention was held in Lawrenceville last year it was the Junior club which had in charge the lovely reception given the visiting club women by the Kiwanis club here. These girls also assisted the Woman's club the following day in serving the luncheon. At this convention the juniors had a very creditable art exhibit which won many favorable comments.

They helped in the recent clean-up campaign, and in observing better homes week; the chairman assigned them the program for Friday afternoon and they carried out a very enjoyable and highly entertaining one. And after a very interesting description of Kenmore given by the sponsor of the old colonial home of George Washington's sister, Betty Washington Lewis, as a souvenir of this occasion of better homes week the girls had printed and presented to each guest a copy of an old recipe of Mary Washington (mother of George) for gingerbread, and one which was found in her old cook book and handed down to the present generation and which is called Lafayette gingerbread.

Lafayette Ginger Bread.

Marquis de Lafayette returned to America after the revolutionary war in the fall of 1784; and after a visit to his old friend, George Washington, at Mt. Vernon, one of his sister's children, one of the Lewis boys, accompanied Lafayette to Fredericksburg to pay his respects to Mary Washington, General Washington's mother. They found her in her garden in short gown, pettycoat and cap, raking leaves.

Unaffectedly she greeted him, and together they went into the house, where she made him a mint-julep and served to him with some of her own favorite ginger bread.

Listening with pleased attention to the Frenchman's praises of her son, her only reply was, "George was always a good boy."

In bidding her "good-bye" Lafayette asked for her blessing. Lifting her hands, she prayed that the favor of God might be with him always. Deeply moved, he bent and kissed her hand.

This receipt for Lafayette ginger bread, as it was ever afterwards called, was found in her old worn cookery book:

Cut up in a pan ½ cup of very best fresh butter with ½ cup of excellent brown sugar and beat to a cream with a paddle. Add 1 cup of West India molasses and ½ cup warm milk. 2 tablespoons powdered ginger, 1 heaped teaspoon cinnamon, mace and nutmeg, powdered and mixed, 1 wine-glass brandy, (I use coffee now). Beat 3 eggs till very light and thick; 3 cups flour, which sift and stir alternately with the beaten egg into the batter. Last, mix in the juice and grated rind of one large orange.

Dissolve 1 level teaspoon of soda in a little warm water and stir in. Beat until very light. A cup of seeded raisins is an addition. Bake in a loaf sheet, or patty-pans, in a moderate oven.

A glee club was formed last winter from the talented members of the club, and they have added quite a bit to the musical life of the town; they also give musical numbers at their meetings. They have from time to time had chicken dinners, oyster suppers, Easter egg hunts, lawn parties, card parties and held rummage sales, and have put on several royalty plays of Wayne P. Sewell, all of which have increased their funds in the treasury and enabled them to help in the many contributions where they are called upon to do their bit. The sponsor in behalf of the club has given several books to the school library. The club owns a copy of "Haskin's American Government" and it is the desire of the club now to start a class this fall for the study of this history and also of citizenship. A parliamentarian who holds her classes in her own home in groups and there is a very active thrift chairman who is planning some wonderful work for the coming year.

This club sent a delegate to Atlanta last year to the 28th annual convention of Women's clubs, also one to Clayton for the annual meeting of the ninth district. And quite an honor was given this club this summer by being asked to have the pleasure of sending one of our junior club girls to the biennial council which met at Tallulah Falls to act as page for the ninth district. The club has publicity given it through both the local newspapers; mentions being made of meetings and all activities of the juniors. They have very recently contributed to the fund to repair the Lawrenceville room of the Winnie Davis dormitory at the State Normal school at Athens.

All of the other organizations call upon the juniors for help whenever needed, and they always respond gladly and willingly. Just before the Christmas holidays they helped in the Red Cross sale, and assisted the P.-T. A.'s in a bazaar, the funds from which were used to furnish a restroom for the teachers in the new school building.

The Constitution Campaign.

At the February meeting of this club a resolution was passed indorsing the present campaign of The Atlanta Constitution against the carrying of firearms and the sale of pistols. In June of this year the motorcade over the Stone Mountain Memorial highway passed through Lawrenceville and stopped over for a short stay, during which time the junior club girls entertained them and served punch and fruit, and pinned a flower on the lapel of each guest. Some of the members of this club are pupils of the domestic science class, and on one of the Better Homes days they gave a program, kept open house and served refreshments prepared by themselves. Several months ago a committee from the local Woman's club and the sponsor of the Junior club appeared before the county school board and county commissioners and were instrumental in getting the promise of a county demonstrator for the rural districts of this county. Much charity work has been done by this little group of girls; flowers and trays sent to the sick, postcard showers to patients of the town who were confined in hospitals in other cities and many notes of sympathy and condolence sent.

Their outstanding work for the coming year will be, besides the home and school work here, the raising of funds for contributions to the Tallulah Falls athletic field and playgrounds at the Tallulah Industrial school, which is owned and maintained by the clubs of the Georgia Federation, and to the student aid fund.

The meetings for the older juniors occur on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, the first meeting devoted to business and the third to the social side of the club with a musical, literary or dramatic program. The younger juniors meet with the sponsor on Saturdays. For all these girls recreational features are stressed, for through these attractions young people can always be reached, and as Mrs. Sharp says, "Once their confidence is gained and the organization completed, enough that is worth while can be introduced to make the program balanced. Give them clean, wholesome supervised and chaperoned recreation and interests and their time will be so completely filled with what is good and beneficial there will be no time left for the undesirable."

Planting Time at Tallulah School.

As the large and extensive grounds of the Tallulah Falls school are now in condition for the planting of bulbs and other flowers, cl

Hon. Jessie Dell, Georgian, Makes History at Capital

(A photograph of Miss Dell, about whom this story is written, appears in the Rotogravure Section of today's Constitution.)

BY KATE SOUTHERLAND.

Washington, D. C., November 7.—(Special.)—The feminine highway begins to broaden. Its serrated surface grows smoother upgrade. Enforced detours are a bit less frequent here in close proximity of Capitol hill—and all because of the Lady from Georgia. She came. They saw. She conquered!

Need even the veriest stranger inquire who, perchance, this heralded victor may be? Why the Honorable Jessie Dell, to be sure, civil service commissioner of these United States of America by the grace of her own personality and the discriminating perception of an eminent chief executive.

And so, the aforesaid highway is for the time being transformed into something approaching a political primrose path. At the moment, indeed, all's not quiet along the Potomac, they say, for wherever one goes these balmy autumn days one hears a steady hum of lively and approving interest in the newly appointed official. Newcomers beg to meet this woman of superlative ability and surpassing charm. Old-timers insist on renewing certain happy associations of earlier days. Innumerable organizations vie with each other for the privilege of claiming her as their honor guest on special occasions. And so it goes. Miss Dell is in demand—and she meets the demand in every way.

Born in Sylvania.

Her official fitness, you ask? Why, even now, while only on the threshold of her new career, her discerning judgment is daily sought by colleagues and congressmen; her well-known sympathies are once again enlisted on behalf of many a seasoned veteran of the war-torn fields of France; her invariable stand for fairness to women is effectively demonstrated. It would seem, indeed, that our war department's loss would prove to be the nation's gain through a field of less limited opportunity.

Surely the daughter of John Crawford Dell, that early leader of the Georgia bar, and of Frances Caroline Sharpe, the noted belle and beauty of the later sixties, needs no introduction to the people of her own state, despite her long absence in America and abroad. Suffice it to say, however, that a pivotal point on the aforesaid national feminine highway these colorful days is the little town of Sylvania, the birthplace and girlhood home of Jessie Dell. It may be noted incidentally just now that full many a well-thumbed map is ringed around with red in honor thereof.

'Twas woman's inauguration day—the eighteenth of September. A brilliant assemblage awaited the commissioner-designate when she was escorted in to subscribe to the solemn oath of allegiance. The historic Roosevelt room—which, by the way, is now her own—was banked in bloom the while that eminent son of a Georgia mother (himself a former commissioner) smiled down from the opposite wall on this his most recent successor in high office. The click of cameras was momentarily stilled as President Deming, of the commission, signaled for silence and in singularly well-chosen words first warmly welcomed the incoming executive and then felicitated both the service and her friends in no uncertain manner. He was ably seconded by his brother commissioner, Mr. Wales. The oath of office was then administered by John Doyle, the veteran secretary of the commission for forty years.

Her Supreme Moment.

Modestly, but with all the dignity and distinction inherent in her birth and breeding, Jessie Dell stepped forth from the surrounding circle composed of every loyal Georgian in town, from congressional delegate to local resident, to make acknowledgment of the resounding plaudits showered upon her from every side of this historic room. Her rose-pink cheeks grew pinker, her eyes were misty with the effort to keep down her rising emotions. It was her supreme moment—and right royally, as well as modestly, did this loyal daughter of the southland wear her well-won laurels. The soft southern accent faltered ever so slightly. Though entirely unprepared, it was for the briefest of seconds she hesitated; then, with all that happiness of expression which has so marked her every public effort, she voiced deep appreciation of the honor bestowed upon her the while she made acknowledgment of her obligation to president and people—to press and personal partisans. Long a suffragist herself, the cause of woman suffrage is triumphantly vindicated, if need there be indeed, in Jessie Dell.

"Being, as you well know, still an ungathered rose on mine ancestral tree," she ventured, "I shall term this happy occasion my eagerly awaited but long deferred wedding day. And hereto I plight my troth—ever to be loyal, faithful and true to the trust you have reposed in me. With your splendid belief in me to spur me on to ever higher endeavor, it is impossible that I should fail."

Always faultlessly attired, a woman of singular charm and marked personal attraction; ultra-feminine, and yet able to a degree usually credited only to the rigidly reserved masculine mentality, the Honorable Jessie Dell, United States civil service commissioner, is an outstanding representative of her sex in the affairs of the nation—one who has blazed a trail along its feminine highway from Sylvania to Washington.

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will b gone and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store and it never fails to do the work.—(adv.)

La Roca Circle. Holds Meeting.

The regular business meeting was held at East Point Masonic temple Tuesday evening, November 3, during which time Mrs. Emma Brooks, grand vice president of Georgia, made a very interesting talk, in which the winning of the trip to Omaha and the importance of the school of instruction to be held November 16 was stressed. Miss Myrtle Hardy, captain of Talley guards, Maple Grove, also made a splendid talk, after which the following committees were appointed: Refreshment committee: Mrs. W. Scifres, Mrs. George Owens, Mrs. Cornette; sick committee; Mrs. I. L. Moultrie, Mrs. Ocala Pyron, Mrs. C. D. Owens; reception committee: Mrs. Kate Thompson, Miss Lois Whitlock, Mrs. Frank Burnie; attendance committee, Mrs. C. H. Thompson, Mrs. Kendrick, Mrs. Cornette; publicity committee: Miss Myrtie Stephenson.

With concerted efforts of the officers, it will mean that this circle accomplish its aim for the ensuing term, as each meeting is full of interesting information and all members are urged to be present.

War Mothers Will Honor Gold Star Mothers

The November meeting of the War Mothers Service Star Legion will be in honor of the gold star members, on Tuesday, November 10, in Edico hall, corner of Peachtree and Harris streets.

The meeting will be opened with the presentation of the Service Star Legion ritual. Mrs. L. T. Stalling will play the marches and lead the patriotic songs. After the business meeting, Mrs. Sam D. Jones, the president, will express greetings and appreciation to the honor guests. Mrs. Marcus Beck, Mrs. Dan Doyle and Mrs. E. L. Connally will respond. Many interesting matters will be discussed. Miss Marion Speer will give two numbers on the violin.

All members of Service Star Legion are urged to be present and help make the occasion a happy one for the honor guests.

GEORGIA DIVISION

Daughters of the Confederacy

Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, Montezuma, president; Mrs. S. G. Lang, Sandersville, first vice president; Mrs. Frank Exley, Savannah, second vice president; Mrs. W. T. Bankston, Roberta, third vice president; Miss Laura Fraser, Flemington, recording secretary; Mrs. F. M. Mullino, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Charles Hillman, Quitman, treasurer; Mrs. Kirby Smith Anderson, Madison, registrar; Miss Mildred Rutherford, Athens, historian; Miss Rebecca Black DuPont, Savannah, recorder of crosses; Mrs. I. Bashinsky, Dublin, auditor; Mrs. Lee Trammell, Madison, recorder of crosses of service.

Honorary Presidents—Mrs. C. Helen Plane, Decatur; Mrs. W. S. Coleman, Atlanta; Miss Anna Caroline Benning, Columbus; Mrs. Ida Evans Eve, Augusta; Mrs. McCord Roberts, Atlanta, state editor.

Mrs. McKenzie Is New President

Georgia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy enters upon the thirty-second year of existence under the guidance of Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, of Montezuma, who was selected at Sandersville on October 29, the last day of the thirty-first convention, to succeed Mrs. Walter Grace, of Macon, whose term of office expired by limitation. As is customary, the newly-elected president named the corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. M. Mullino, of Montezuma. From Montezuma comes the following information regarding the division's new president and secretary:

Mrs. McKenzie and Mrs. F. M. Mullino are natives of Macon county, members of old established families which have been leaders in the affairs of the county since its earliest days and the honor conferred upon them is deeply appreciated, not only by their home community but by the county at large.

Mrs. McKenzie, daughter of the late Major James D. Frederick, of Marshallville, is recording secretary of the Georgia division D. A. R. and of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, a graduate of Wesleyan college, a woman of brilliant attainments and eminently fitted for the office to which she has been elected. She is a member of the Phil Cook chapter U. D. C. of Montezuma and the James D. Frederick chapter of Marshallville. Mrs. Mullino is the daughter of the late J. J. Murphy, of Marshallville, a graduate of Wesleyan, an accomplished musician. In her church relations she has wielded a wide influence and has held responsible positions in the south Georgia conference.

Mrs. Lang Honored.

Mrs. S. G. Lang, of Sandersville, official hostess to the 31st convention, was elected first vice president. Uniform approval was expressed by delegates when the honor of first vice president was bestowed upon the president of the Mary Ann Williams chapter of Sandersville, delegates declaring the nominating committee's choice highly satisfactory both as regarded placing this gracious leader in so important a position and as following the time-honored custom of the division in bestowing a high office upon a leader in the chapter entertaining the convention.

Mrs. Frank Exeley, of Savannah, was elected second vice president, Mrs. W. T. Bankston, of Roberta, third vice president; Mrs. I. Bashinsky, of Dublin, auditor. The recording secretary, Miss Laura Frazier, of Flemington; the treasurer, Mrs. Charles T. Tilman, of Quitman; the registrar, Mrs. Kirby Smith Anderson of Madison, continue in office until the 32d convention, they having been elected at Quitman in October, 1924, for a term of two years. The office of state editor was made elective at Sandersville through amendment to the constitution and your former editor duly elected with other officers. In addition, the office of recorder of crosses of service was created, and Mrs. Lee Trammell, of Madison, elected. Miss Mildred Rutherford, Miss Lillie Martin, Miss Rebecca Black Dupont continue in the offices they fill so splendidly.

Statesboro and Covington, through Mrs. Julian Lane and Mrs. Trox Bankston invited the next U. D. C. convention, Statesboro winning by one vote. This was Statesboro's second invitation. Congratulations are due Sandersville citizens as well as the members of Mary Ann Williams chapter in the brilliant short speeches which marked the opening evening of the convention and compressed the program into agreeable length.

Courtesies extended delegates began at Tennille, where a large reception committee awaited all incoming trains on Tuesday and these courtesies were expressed in various ways through each hour until that final moment of boarding homeward-bound trains on Friday. The social side of the convention was featured by luncheons, teas and an elaborate reception on Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Holt.

Stone Mountain was the outstanding subject of discussion throughout the convention and every phase of opinion expressed in formal debate which occupied practically all of both daytime sessions on Thursday, crowding even election of officers almost to adjournment hour. Probably no U. D. C. president has ever been the object of such an attack as was hurled against Mrs. Grace by her opponents, each one of whom proved herself sincere, determined and forceful. That the convention voted to sustain the position taken by the president of the division must be credited to the equally sincere and clearly set forth statements of that president, and to the remarkable poise and fair-mindedness with which she heard all arguments against her opinions.

Awards Made.

An increase of 635 members was announced by the state registrar, Mrs. Kirby Smith Anderson, bringing the division's total up to 17,540. Awards made at the convention included the John A. Perdue silver vase given by Mrs. Perdue to Roberta chapter, Children of the Confederacy for the largest increase in new members, the increase being 36. Award of the Anna Bryant medal to Eugenia Ross, of Dublin. Award of the Adeline Baum banner to the Roberta chapter. Award of the Raines banner to Lavonia chapter. Award of the historical essay medal for the best essay in the state in which 27,000 essays were entered, to Thelma Herndon, of Brunswick. Miss Herndon delivered from memory the full text of her prize-winning essay, and made a most attractive convention guest.

The Lamar trophy, given by Mrs. Walter Lamar, of Macon, in honor of the valor of the soldiers of the south went to Hawkinsville, which bestowed during the year 51 crosses of service. The Selden banner, presented by Mrs. John Selden, of Macon, went to Agnes Lee chapter of Decatur, and is bestowed on a per capita basis for greatest number of essays entered in the state contest. The Alice Baxter loving cup went to Kennesaw chapter, Marietta, for greatest increase in members between ages of 18 and 25. The Margaret Carter Hunt loving cup was won by Atlanta chapter for greatest increase in new members.

Quitman Chapter.

Quitman Daughters of the Confederacy have been unusually active during the past year, their work centering in educational causes and in caring for veterans and their widows. They have a scholarship fund of $830 and at present three girls and two young men are beneficiaries. Last spring when it was necessary to raise a special fund for the city schools the chapter contributed $50 and has given generously to state U. D. C. causes.

For Confederate widows' relief $85 has been given locally; the funeral expenses of one veteran paid; fifty wreathes placed on graves on Memorial day; luncheon served for the veterans on Memorial day; expenses of a veteran paid to the reunion in Dallas; Christmas cards sent all veterans; baskets sent veterans and widows on Thanksgiving; a box of jellies and preserves valued at $51 sent to the Old Soldiers' home; historical books and pictures contributed to the local school and many similar activities mark the year's record. The chapter is the oldest woman's organization in Quitman and numbers 138 members. This year one of the members, Mrs. Charles Tillman, is state treasurer.

State Woman's College Alumnae Club Meet.

There was a very interesting meeting of the Georgia State College for Women Alumnae club recently at 3 o'clock at the home of the first president and founder of the club, Miss Lucile Wright, 441 Greenwood avenue. The membership committee assisted Miss Wright in entertaining.

There were about 20 members present, and one visitor, Miss Drew Lawrence, from Miami, Fla.

The executive board had charge of the program for this meeting. Mrs. J. H. Bowden, president, told of her trip to Tallulah Falls as a delegate to the biennial conference of the Federation of Women's Clubs, which was held there.

A letter was read from Mrs. F. K. Johnson, of Miami, Fla., formerly of Atlanta, stating her resignation as corresponding secretary. Miss Julia Mae Fillingim was elected to fill the vacancy as corresponding secretary and chairman of the press committee.

Miss Lucia Smith gave two numbers on the ukulele. Mrs. F. R. Yarbrough gave a report of her visit to the Fifth District Federation of Women's Club meeting at College Park, Ga., October 14.

The study of "parliamentary law" was taken up at this meeting, led by Mrs. Charles W. Anderson. The subject for the October meeting was "The Introduction to Parliamentary Law."

The year books were distributed to all members present at this meeting. Those who were on the year book committee, and who have been responsible for this accomplishment are: Mrs. Wilber R. Wilson, chairman; Miss Julia Mae Fillingim, co-chairman; Miss Jimmie Brown, Mrs. F. R. Yarbrough, Miss Ida Margaret Randell, Mrs. P. D. Cunningham, Mrs. Charles W. Anderson, Miss Helen Green and Mrs. L. V. Ware.

Mrs. Richardson To Speak To Civic Club of West End

The Woman's Civic club of West End will hold its regular second Wednesday meeting at the club at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Arthur J. Merrill, president, will preside. Mrs. J. H. Savage, sponsor for the program, has been fortunate in securing Mrs. Alonzo Richardson for principal speaker. Mrs. Frank McCormack will also be present and Deneen McCormack, who won the city prize, the state prize, and the southeastern prize for being the best violinist between the ages of 13 and 15, will favor the audience with several selections. Miss Harriett Woolridge will accompany him. Mrs. Arthur Burdett will read. The entire personnel of the program consists of associates of Mrs. Savage in better films work.

Unusual interest in being manifested in the Bible class sponsored by the advisory board, Mrs. Fred Stewart, chairman. Dr. W. M. Seay ably delineated the character of Peter last Tuesday afternoon. The study of the Bible is an annual undertaking of the club and the classes are open to the community at large. This year the 12 apostles will be studied in the order they were chosen and Dr. C. M. Meeks, pastor of Park Street Methodist church, will lecture on James Tuesday afternoon from 3 to 4 o'clock.

Miss Ann Bowie will hold her first class in public speaking Wednesday at 2 o'clock, preceding the regular meeting of the club. The class is open to the public. Registrations may be made at any time. Miss Bowie will give one lesson a week and will charge a nominal fee of $2 for the course. She will give a resume of the work she took at the Emerson School of Expression, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. V. L. Patton, chairman of open house meetings, will sponsor a benefit bridge Friday, the 13th, at 2 o'clock. Table prizes will be given. For reservations call West 0064, or Mrs. C. C. Chamberlain, West 1081.

The hospital committee, Mrs. C. C. Shipley, chairman invites all interested to meet with her Tuesday morning from 9 to 12 o'clock, to make bandages for Grady hospital. She is also ready for any donations to the needle work guild.

Mrs. Myers Loveless is preparing the soil of the club grounds for fall planting and to finance this will sponsor a private sale of home-made cakes. For information call West 2006-W.

The annual bazar will be held the first week in December and all committee chairmen are invited to get their donations ready by the middle of November.

The literary committee, Mrs. Murray Howard, chairman, held its regular meeting Wednesday. The life of Frank L. Stanton, Georgia's beloved poet-laureate, was happily presented by Mrs. Henry Sanders. Mrs. Lila Ellis gave a lovely interpretation of a group of his poems and Mrs. Eugene McElroy sang two of his sweetest songs. Mrs. Henry Burpitt was at the piano.

Mrs. T. S. Sells deserves much credit for the carnival. Th parade reflected honor upon Mrs. O. M. Bowling, chairman of automobiles. The fashion show was sponsored by Mrs. R. T. Lively, and the variety show was sponsored by Mrs. Sefton B. Strickland. The dog show was under the direction of Mrs. R. T. Connally.

The K. O. X. club met Friday evening at 8 o'clock and the Bluebirds convened Friday afternoon and elected officers.

In each department—Loan, Investment, Rental and Insurance—there are features which offer the advantages and superiorities so widely recognized in the firm of Weyman & Connors, for that is the basis upon which this splendid organization has been built and you are sure of dependable service supporting the business policies and ideals of 35 years.

National Canning Foods Week. Stock Your Pantry From Rogers'.

This next week, beginning tomorrow, the 9th to the 21st, is National Canned Foods Week. Now is the time to store your pantry shelves with all kinds of good things for this winter, and at the Rogers Stores you will find the best known brands of canned goods for your selection at the lowest of prices.

Prepare yourself for any emergency so that no matter what occasion arises you will be in readiness to meet it with a sufficiency of foodstuffs that you desire with which to plan and prepare a delicious meal at no trouble whatever and at a moment's notice. The unexpected guest can be given a hearty welcome when you are so prepared, so stock up on the things you like best at Rogers; they have everything you will want or need.

Any brand that you ask for, nearly, Rogers has for you, and especially fine are the Del Monte and Libby canned goods and in either of these you can obtain every variety of fruits, vegetables and meats. In the Underwood brand there are sea-foods, fish, oysters, sardines, etc. Heinz products are numerous and there are many delicacies to tempt the appetite, among them being good old-fashioned Boston Baked Beans, that we all know about, enjoy and like. Campbell's Soups are the best ever, and there is a wide assortment of them, each splendid, adding a zest to your lunch or dinner, making it all the more enjoyable.

What a joy and satisfaction it will be to the housewife knowing that she has a goodly supply of all these delectable things with which to serve her homefolks, for so many different dishes can be made from canned goods that there should be an endless variety of delicious things on her table when the fresh products are out of season and cannot be obtained.

The Rogers Stores are introducing to their customers Pillsbury's Pancake and Buckwheat Flour and are making a special offer to you with the purchase of three packages of either of these, or a combination of the two, an aluminum griddle that they will sell you for $1.89, and worth double the price asked for it. The griddle is made of pure aluminum of heavy quality and large enough for three large-sized pancakes, and has a wooden handle that is heat-proof. These griddles require no greasing and cakes cooked on them are light and fluffy, golden brown to a turn.

With Pillsbury's Pancake Flour it is very simple to have delicious pancakes all the time. They are so easy to make, add water or milk and bake. What waffles this flour makes! They are as light as a feather and so crisp that your family will be delighted with them. Add an egg and a tablespoon of melted butter and bake in a hot waffle iron. Try them; you will enjoy them, and if you do so, I feel sure that either waffles or pancakes made of Pillsbury's Flour will be on your breakfast menu every morning.

Cruises On the Glorious Caribbean.

What could be more enjoyable and interesting than a cruise to the West Indies on a luxurious de luxe steamer? The Caribbean Sea, its shores and islands, is the most romantic portion of the Western Hemisphere, of rich historic background, quite Spanish in its foreignness, charming and alluring with a delightful semi-tropical climate.

The John M. Born Steamship Agency in the Candler Building can give you all the information concerning these cruises to the West Indies, sailing dates, duration of voyages, ports of call and expenses of same.

There are besides these cruises, Cruises to the Mediterranean, cruises Around the World, and others, so see Mr. Born, have a talk with him. The details will interest you so intently that you will want to set sail and see some of the beautiful countries of the Old World.

Every Housewife Should Know Merits of Products.

The American Bakeries Company are the makers of the famous Merita products, and their New South Bakery at 45 Glenn Street is a wonderfully equipped plant, complete in the most minute detail. An inspection tour through this model plant, that is flooded with light, sunshine and ventilation, will delight and convince you of the superiority and fine quality of their products. The way "Merita" is winning buyers everywhere furnishes the final proof of its merits.

The American Bakeries have studied out all the problems that confront the large baking plants of today. They are constantly on the alert to improve wherever possible with new equipment, larger output, better and more varieties of breads and cakes. They have perfected their products by establishing a laboratory, the only one of its kind in the South, where scientific experiments and operations are carried on by three skilled chemists, who are engaged in analytical work every day, testing flour and other ingredients that go into the making of the Merita products. Only the best and purest are used, so when you buy any product with the name "Merita" on the label, you can be sure of its goodness and wholesomeness.

There is a miniature bakery with its small ovens and mixers also in this plant, used by the chemists in their research work in connection with the laboratory, where they are constantly experimenting, inventing, and trying out by baking new and delicious breads and cakes that will please and delight the housewife, liberating her of the care and bother of bread and cake making.

Every type of bread or cake that is baked at this wonderful plant is made from the most highly refined flour by machinery marvelous in its mechanism, making the best products obtainable in a modern bakery, furnishing the body with energy-giving food, and is appetizing, delicious and healthful.

Every requirement has been thought of and each requirement met by the American Bakeries, as they desire to produce products that every housewife could have confidence in—always making them good—always keeping them good.

Unless you are familiar with the Merita products you have not fully realized just how good they really are, and that by their use on your table every day you will enjoy your meals all the more, for there is an accuracy of baking skill in them that they are always the same and highly pleasing to the taste, and delicious, and you can be certain of getting fresh bread and cake each time you buy them.

Everywhere in this spacious, light and sanitary plant is the whir of machinery, and the delightful aroma of fresh baked goodies just from the great hot ovens greet you, and the longer you stay in the plant the more hungry you become—everything smells so good—looks so good—and is so good.

When buying bread, rolls or cake don't forget to ask and look for the Merita trade-mark. They are pure and savor of goodness. You will enjoy them and can depend on it always and have a confidence and security that come from receiving the utmost value for your money: the quality is all there. Your grocer has all of the different varieties of Merita products in their stock for your choosing, and such a list to choose from—Loaf Bread, Raisin Bread, simply filled with luscious, large puffed Sun Maid raisins; Biscuit Rolls, Cinnamon Buns, Cakes of all kinds and flavors, including the best fruit-cake you can imagine. Try some of these; you will be pleased, I am certain, and one taste of any of them will make you an enthusiastic Merita customer for always.

Satins Return to Favor.

One thing that impresses the observer of fashions this season is the importance of soft-surfaced fabrics. There are very few smart materials that are not distinguishable for their almost velvety surfaces.

Size No Item.

A single ornate ring, set with a square-cut emerald or ruby, is a fashionable fancy in Paris, and often the stone or cluster of stones is so large that it covers a considerable portion of the hand.

On Thursday, November 12, practically every Girl Scout in Atlanta will don an apron, enter her mother's kitchen and prepare the evening meal for the family, giving her mother a holiday on the cook's afternoon off, and incidentally demonstrating to her household that Girl Scout training makes good homemakers. This is one of the features of Girl Scout homemaking week which will be observed by scouts throughout the United States, November 7 to 14.

More than half of the program of the Girl Scouts is made up of activities related to the home, and its aim has always been to develop a group of healthy, happy, useful girls, skilled in the normal activities of the home and growing naturally into the wholesome type of young woman who believes and practices that whatever other interests she may have, she should always be responsible for helping to create a happy home atmosphere. Other features of the week in Atlanta include a daily demonstration of homemaking and camp activities in the needlework, children's, sport clothes and furniture departments of Davison-Paxon-Stokes company's store on Whitehall street, who have also extended the courtesy of one of their show windows to display the handicraft work of the Atlanta Girl Scouts. Fifteen to twenty scouts will take part in the demonstration each afternoon during the week at 3 o'clock. Girl Scout mothers will act as chaperons for the scouts in each department.

The Beauty Lowe to France

By Edna Wallace Hopper

I have made 34 trips to France in my search for beauty. I spent my 1925 summer vacation in Paris, and I found some remarkable advances.

That's how I get the best beauty helps in existence. As a girl I went to France for the best she had to offer. And for 40 years she has given me all her new discoveries. These I have used to gain my fame as a beauty, and to keep my youth.

Now I offer you the best helps I have found. All toilet counters supply them as Edna Wallace Hopper's beauty aids. Made exactly as I use them. And most of them combine several helps in one.

I am trying to induce every girl and woman to learn how much they mean. That beauty and youth millions envy in me show what such helps can do. I want all to share them.

One is my Youth Cream. It combines many helps. These include products of both lemon and strawberry. All the best that science knows to foster, feed and preserve the skin.

Youth Cream comes in two types—cold and vanishing. I use one at bedtime, one in the morning. Never is my skin without it. To that I largely owe my wonderful complexion, my girlish contours, my rosy bloom.

Committee Reports Feature Meeting of Hapeville Club

I. H. Moorehouse, Jr., of the Georgia Railway and Power company, talked to the Hapeville Woman's club at their regular business meeting, Thursday, November 5, on the advantages of electrical cooking. Mr. Moorehouse's talk was the result of an interview by a committee, with Mrs. Emma A. Moore, chairman, in regard to having gas service extended to Hapeville. A survey, for this purpose, is being made, but Mr. Moorehouse explained that, in case gas is not available, electric ranges may be operated at the same cost with even better results.

A regular business meeting followed, in which there were many interesting committee reports.

Mrs. H. H. Sims, speaking for Mrs. Fred Johnson, chairman of home economics, reported an enrollment of sixty pupils in the cooking school which is being conducted at the auditorium this week by Mrs. Elizabeth Stanfield. Many practical prizes were given each day.

Mrs. Emma A. Moore, federation chairman, reported several meetings. She stated that the federated clubs especially urged cooperation in the maintenance of the Tallulah Falls Industrial school, the Needlework guild, the Service legion, the keeping of clean streets and the prevention of cruelty to animals. A motion was carried that the club take the responsibility of the Needlework guild for this section.

Mrs. N. A. Anderson, chairman garden committee, reported progress in beautifying the parks and plans were discussed for keeping the streets clean.

Mrs. Fred Hunnicutt, chairman literary committee, will have charge of the program meeting Thursday, November 19, at the home of Mrs. D. B. Evans, on Atlanta avenue. Mrs. Hunnicutt stated that Colonel John T. Boifeuillet will talk on "Georgia Poets" and Colonel Joseph W. Humphries will read some original poems. The public is invited to the program meetings of the club.

Lakewood Baptists Hold Meeting.

The Lakewood Baptist church held its regular monthly business meeting Tuesday afternoon at the church.

Mrs. G. C. Daniel, the president, presided over the meeting and appointed her mission study chairman for the year, who is Mrs. James Murray. All chairmen gave their reports and they were very encouraging.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

SUNDAY NOVEMBER 8th, 1925

THREE OF A KIND

and their proud papa, R. W. Swanson, of Chicago, are shown here. The boys were brought into the world by a Caesarian operation which was performed with a local anaesthetic. It is one of the rare cases of its kind. (International) is the title we give this picture of Dolores Del Rio, who comes to us captioned as Mexico's richest woman. Two attractions, but we can't subscribe to the pel monk. (Kadel & Herbert)

WHERE EIGHTEEN MET DEATH

MEXICO'S FAIREST FLOWER

THE JURY OF GENERALS

who compose the trial board for the court martial of Col. William E. Mitchell, former assistant chief of the air service. Gen. R. Howze, chairman of the board, is in the center. General McArthur, whose home was in Atlanta while he was commander of the fourth corps area, is a member of the jury. (International)

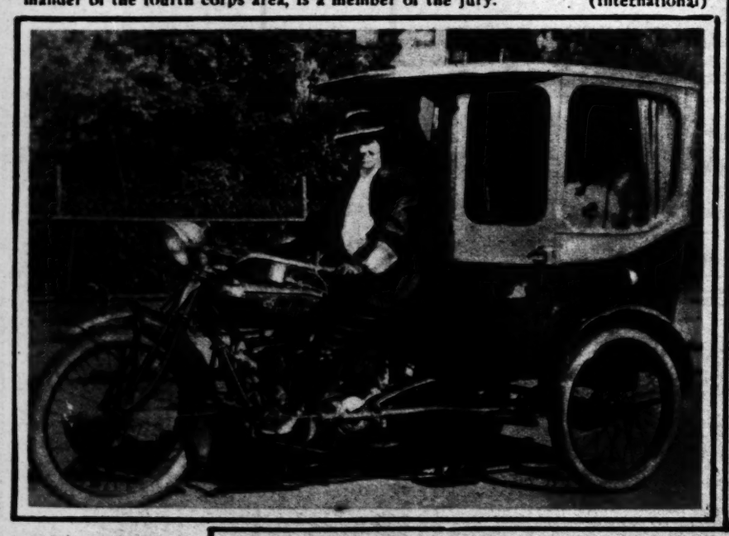

LEAD PROSECUTION OF COLONEL MITCHELL

Col. Sherman Moreland, judge advocate general of the army, and Lieut. Col. J. I. McMullins, his assistant, who lead the prosecution of Col. William Mitchell before the courtmartial in Washington

MAKING IT EASY FOR THE "CLOCK WATCHER"

Ring watches are much in favor now and it may be due, whisper the efficiency experts, to the fact that the hard-working stenographer can see when it's time for lunch without even taking her eyes from the keyboard. This one is worn by Miss Dorismae Bock, of New York. (Kadel & Herbert)

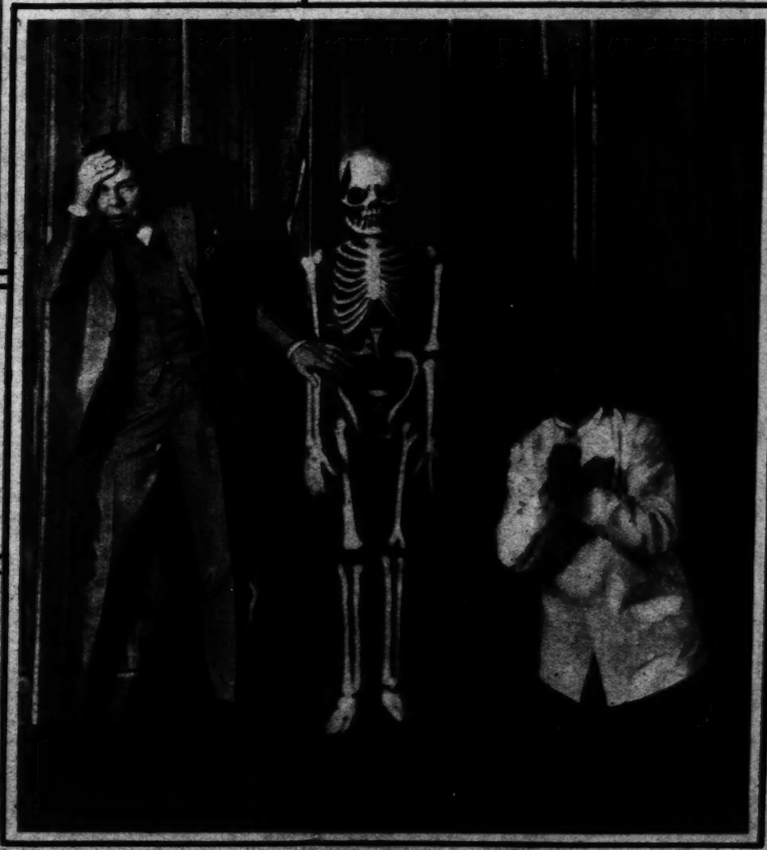

THE LATEST IS THE "TRAFFICCAB"

Perhaps the most novel of all the taxicabs extant is this "trafficcab," made from a motorcycle. The unique conveyance is much more easily manipulated in heavy traffic than the ordinary taxi. Its inventor, a member of the fair sex, is shown operating the car in Athens, N. Y. (Kadel & Herbert)

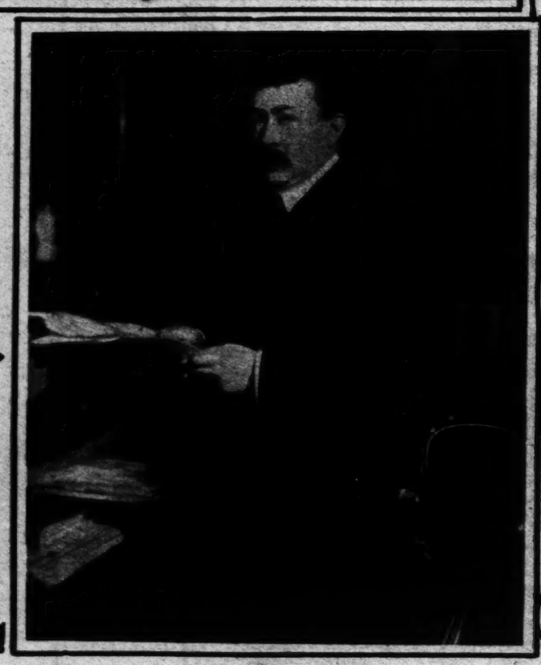

BACK IN SERVICE

is the seaplane PN-), No. 1, in which Commander Rogers and his crew were lost in the Pacific for eight days when the plane failed to make the hop from San Francisco to Hawaii. The ship is shown after a complete overhauling, making a trial flight over Peark Harbor, Hawaii. (Kadel & Herbert) is this scene from "The Gorilla," the comedy mystery play coming to the Atlanta.

A LAUGH RIOT

A MAN'S SIZE JOB

is the one taken on by M. Painleve, premier and minister of finance in the new French cabinet. He succeeds Caillaux, who failed to arrange the American war debt and keep the franc from going to zero. (Kadel & Herbert)

ONCE KING—NOW REMOTE SCIENTIST

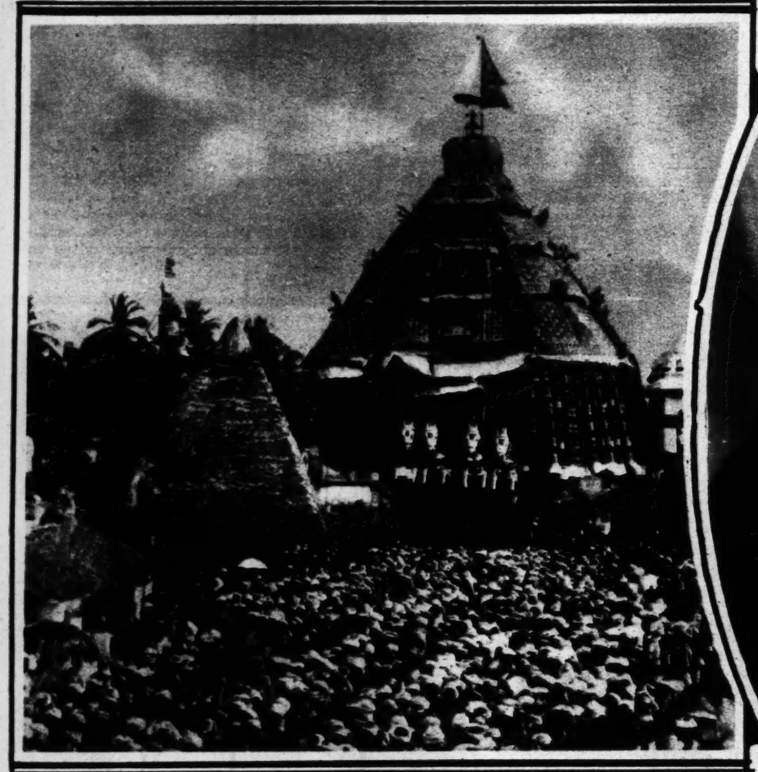

Ferdinand of Bulgaria, once the most powerful of the Balkan monarchs, is now living in exile as a student of bird lore. This photo, the first taken of the former king in years, was made when he attended the meeting of the International Congress of Ornithologists in Berlin. (Kadel & Herbert)

GOVERNORS MEET WITH PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

A LOVELY BRIDE-TO-BE
Miss Margie May Addington, Shreveport, La., whose marriage to William Buchanan, of Americus, Ga., will be a brilliant social event soon. Miss Addington is a graduate of Brenau college, Gainesville, and has made her home in Atlanta for some time.

THE HINDUS' GREATEST STREET FESTIVAL
requires much labor from the celebrants. For instance, it took this crowd at Kumbakonam, India, 26 hours to drag this huge mobile temple a mile. (International)

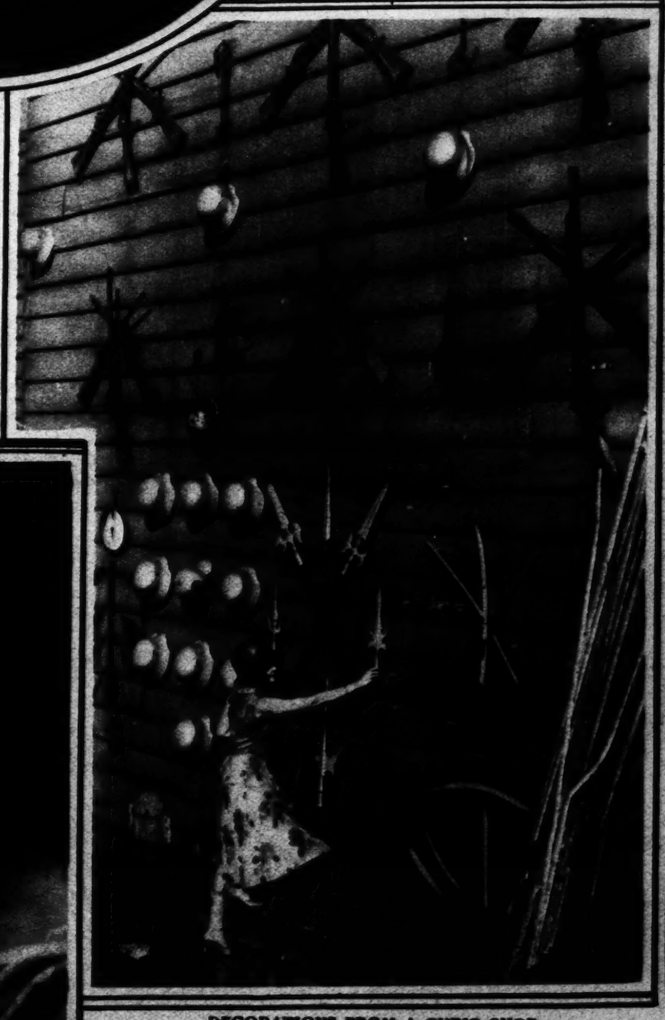

BOY SCOUTS HONOR ROOSEVELT'S MEMORY
Dan Beard, leader of all the Boy Scouts of America, places a wreath at the grave of former President Theodore Roosevelt, as a tribute to the great American's memory. (International)

RETURNS TO ATLANTA
Miss Harriet S. Rhodes, beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest L. Rhodes, who has returned to her Atlanta home after a four years' absence in Colorado Springs. She is now visiting Miss Mary Reid, at 27 Rosedale Road, after which she will be with her parents at home.

WRECKED BY THE GALE
that swept the Atlantic coast recently were 17 navy seaplanes, which were torn from their moorings at Baltimore. Ten will be repaired. The others are total wrecks. (International)

BIG FIGURES IN MOVIE-LAND
Left to right in the picture we have Charlie Chaplin, his wife, and the noted writer, Elinor Glyn, pictured recently as they attended a Los Angeles theater.

"MISS CORDELE"
is the title voted by Cordele business houses to Miss Hazel Gillis. She won a tour of the north and east by winning the contest.

DECORATIONS FROM A CURIO SHOP
One of the greatest war collections in the United States is this bunch of relics owned by Samuel Ziegler, New York, being hung on the side of the shop by a pretty New York miss with a decorative eye. (International)

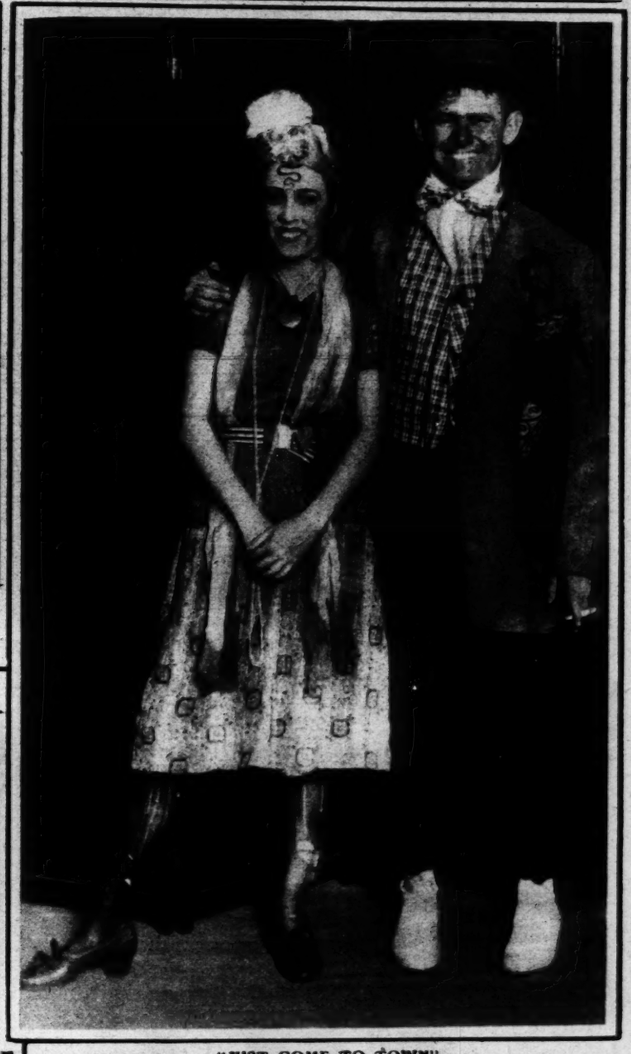

EUROPE'S MOST POPULAR KING
Albert, of the Belgians, also considered the best-dressed ruler in the world, is to pay the United States another visit soon. This is one of his latest photos. (Kadel & Herbert)

"WHAT A CUTE LITTLE DEVIL, is probably what Miss Gertrude Mercer said to Lieutenant C. B. Irwin as this picture was made at the Fort McPherson tacky party, but all of it probably was aimed at the decoration of the "loot's" jersey.
(J. T. Holloway)

CALL THIS CROWD ANYTHING YOU WANT TO
It's impossible for us to distinguish anyone by costume except the gent at the extreme right, who appears to hail from Scotland. This crowd, at the Fort McPherson tacky party, includes, left to right: Major and Mrs. H. J. Keeley, Captain and Mrs. A. R. Bolling, Mrs. E. M. Leard and Captain Leard. (J. T. Holloway) is the impression this couple gave when they appeared in these outfits at the recent Fort McPherson officers' tacky party. In the picture are Miss Mona Dudley and Lieutenant J. A. Otto.

"JUST COME TO TOWN"
(J. T. Holloway)

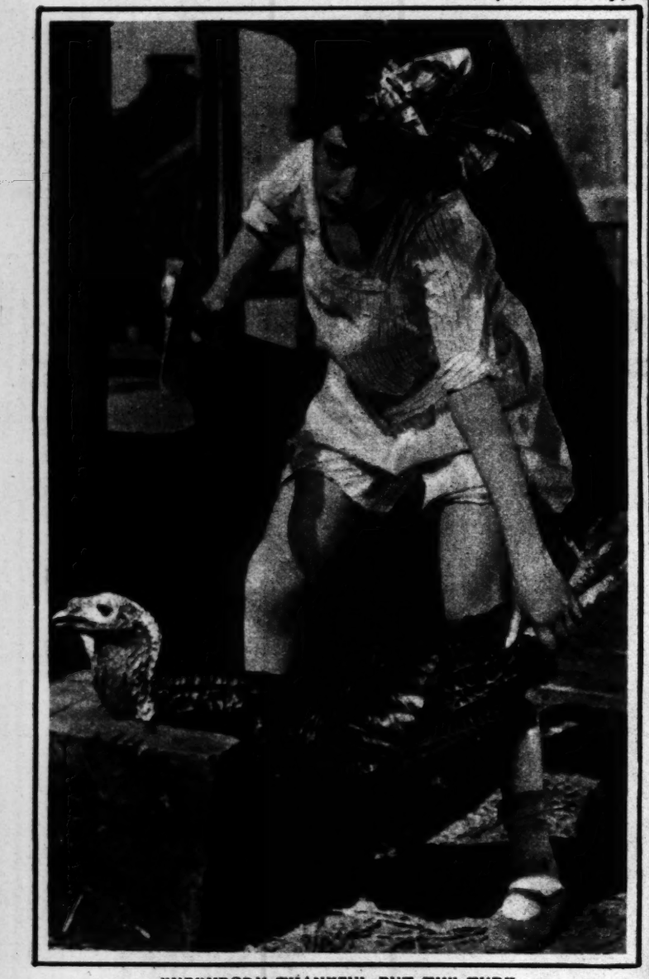

BUT WHAT'S IN THE BOTTLE?
That's the question we must ask as Lieutenant P. E. Hunt soothes Mrs. H. F Lueking with a bottle at the tacky party given by officers and ladies at Fort McPherson recently.
(J. T. Holloway)

FIRST PRIZE WINNERS
at the recent Fort McPherson tacky party are pictured here. They are Mrs. John A. Otto and Lieutenant J. T. Traywick. (J. T. Holloway)

STARRING IN MUSICAL COMEDY
is Roy E. Butler, formerly of Atlanta, who is pictured here with his wife, whose stage name is Alice Richey. Both have had signal success in the musical comedy stage in the east.

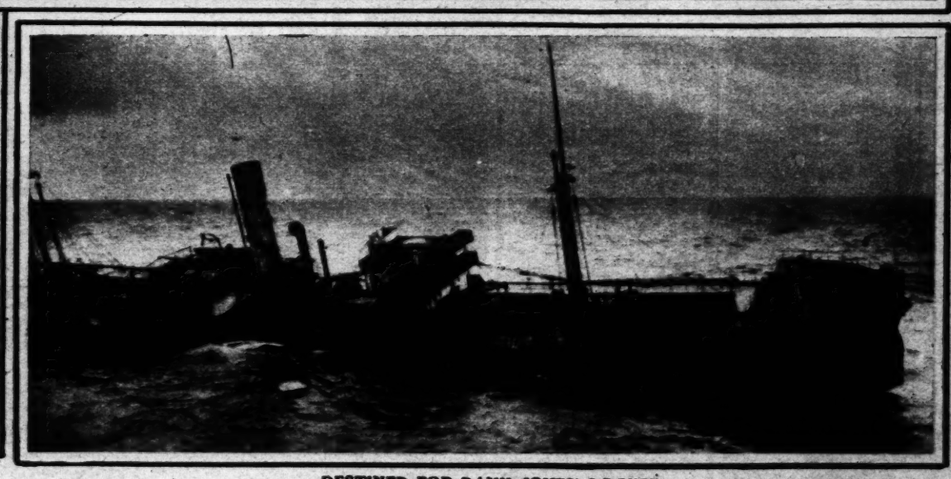

EVERYBODY THANKFUL BUT THE TURK
A rehearsal of the Thanksgiving act shows Mr. Gobbler, the victim, with Sally O'Neill, youthful film star, as the executioner.
(Kadel & Herbert)

ONCE THE PRIDE OF THE SPANISH NAVY
The spray-splashed derelict, the "Reina Christina," once pride of the Spanish navy that shows above the water of Manila bay. The ship and others of the Spanish navy were sunk by Admiral Dewey on May 1, 1898. (Kadel & Herbert)

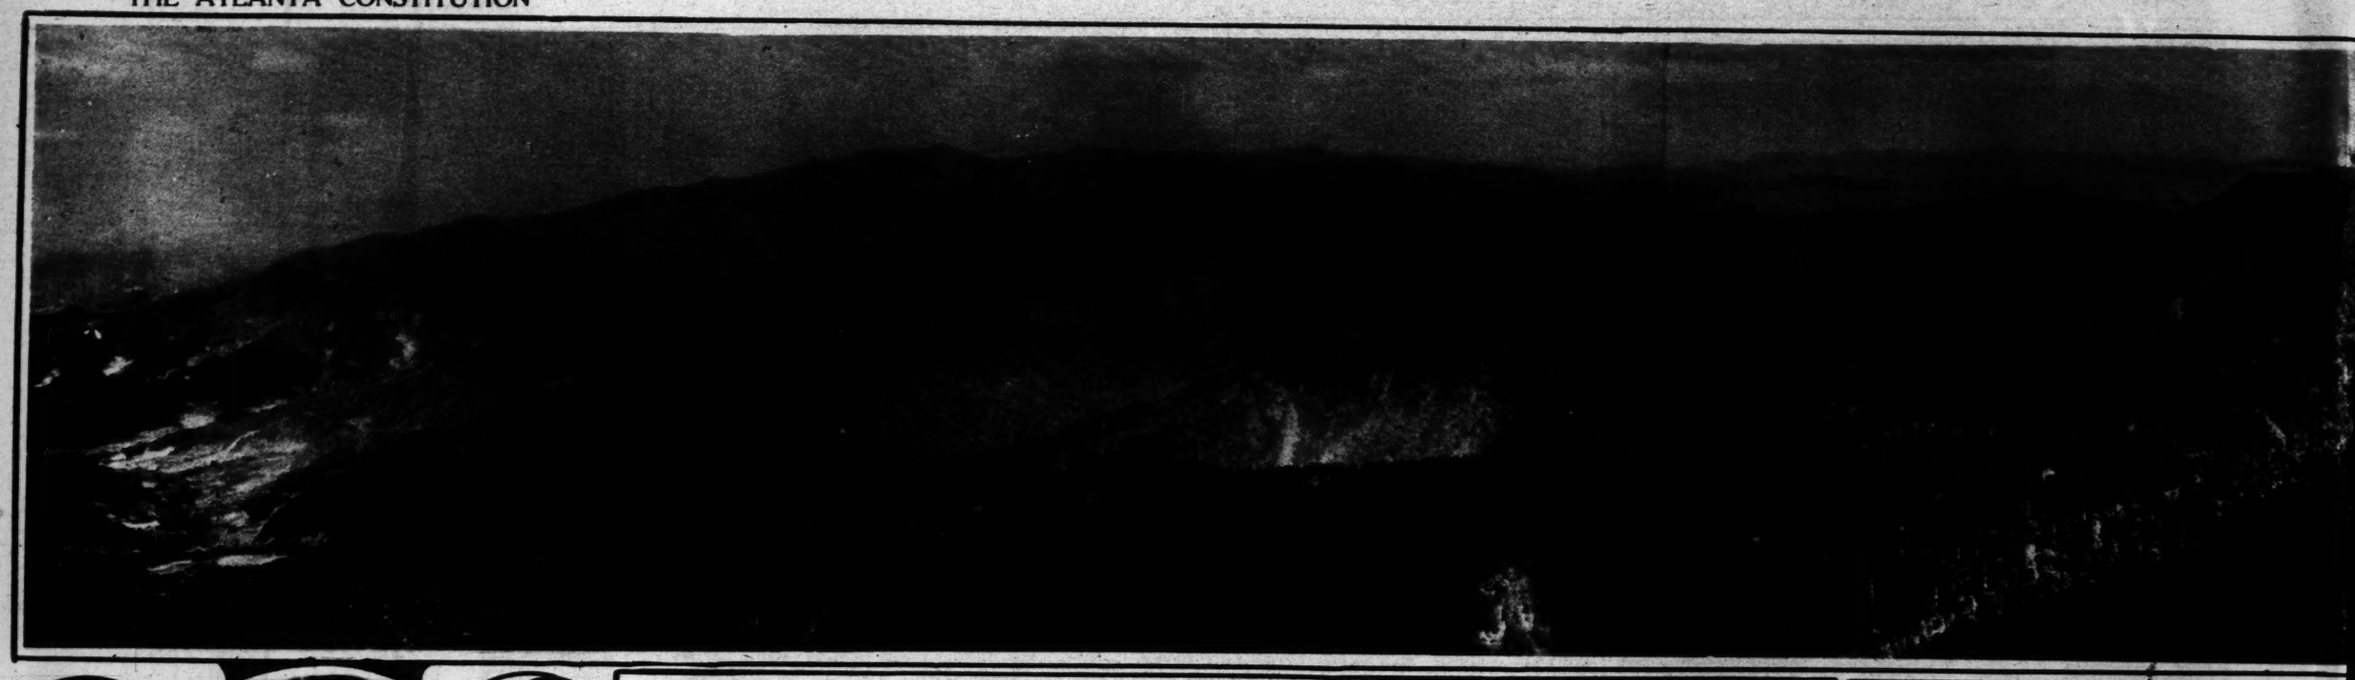

SAFELY THROUGH THE HURRICANE
Members of the crew of the Italian steamer, Ignacio Florio, which foundered in mid-Atlantic, in one of the lifeboats of the S. S. President Harding, which stood by as the ship went down. The rescue of the Italian ship's crew is one of the sea's most thrilling narratives. (Kadel & Herbert)

DESTINED FOR DAVY JONES' LOCKER
A picture from the deck of the S. S. President Harding of the Italian steamer, Ignacio Florio, as it was foundering in mid-Atlantic in a hurricane. The lifeboat that went to the floundering ship from the President Harding is pictured in the foreground. Every member of the ship's crew was saved. (Kadel & Herbert)

THE HONORABLE JESSIE DELL, OF GEORGIA
Brilliant Georgia woman, who was recently appointed by President Coolidge as civil service commissioner of the United States. See story in woman's section. (Harris & Ewing)

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST
is what we might label this picture of Mrs. George Hardeman with the first prize winning Guernsey heifer, owned by Mayo Evenson, at the recent Cobb county fair in Marietta. But the heifer certainly doesn't look beastly. (Kenneth Rogers)

IN THE WAKE OF THE ALABAMA TORNADO
Desolation held forth after the sweep of the tornado that descended on the country near Troy, Ala., recently, killing nearly a score. The wreckage of a house in the path of the big wind is pictured. (Tracy Mathewson)

RULERS OVER BUTTS COUNTY CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION
The king and queen on their thrones in the recent Butts county centennial celebration at Jackson, Ga. Their court was made up of belles of Butts county. The king and queen are L. M. Spencer and Miss Virginia White. (Kenneth Rogers)

Too Fat

Millions now easily reduce

There is no excuse for excess fat today. Any person who permits it suffers in beauty, health and fitness. In every circle you can see that millions have learned how to remove it. Overweight is not one-tenth so common as it was.

The modern way is Marmola Prescription Tablets. It is the easy, pleasant way. No abnormal exercise or diet is required. Take four tablets a day and watch the excess disappear. Reduction is gradual, rarely exceeding a pound a day. So the body adjusts itself to the new condition.

Marmola has been used for 18 years. Countless people have used it and told others about it. The use has spread, until people now are taking a million boxes yearly. There are people all about you who can tell you what it does.

Learn the facts about Marmola. Our book states every ingredient, tells you exactly how it acts. Your own druggist signs our guarantee. In fairness to yourself learn how easy it is to be slender.

Marmola Prescription Tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 per box. Send this coupon for our latest book, a 25-ct. sample free, and our guarantee. Clip it now.

They say it behind your back

THAT'S when they talk about you—when you're not listening or when you're not present.

And, if you're a sensitive person, these are the things that irritate you most.

He knew—or felt—that he was being talked about. And by two men whom he had regarded as his best friends. The thing began to prey on his mind—made him very uncomfortable.

You, yourself, rarely know when you have halitosis (unpleasant breath). That's the insidious thing about it. And even your closest friends won't tell you.

Sometimes, of course, halitosis comes from some deep-seated organic disorder that requires professional advice. But usually—and fortunately—halitosis is only a local condition that yields to the regular use of Listerine as a mouth wash and gargle. It is an interesting thing that this well-known antiseptic that has been in use for years for surgical dressings, possesses these unusual properties as a breath deodorant. It puts you on the safe and polite side.

Listerine halts food fermentation in the mouth and leaves the breath sweet, fresh and clean. Not by substituting some other odor but by really removing the old one. The Listerine odor itself quickly disappears.

This safe and long-trusted antiseptic has dozens of different uses: note the little circular that comes with every bottle. Your druggist sells Listerine in the original brown package only—never in bulk. There are four sizes: 14 ounce, 7 ounce, 3 ounce and 1¼ ounce. Buy the large size for economy.

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

BY HENRY C. ROWLAND

Being the Last of a Series of Six Tales Relating the Extraordinary Feats of One Jacques Hughes, Criminal Searchlight and "Mind Reader."

Joilot came here early in the morning and hung around outside the wall until his little son toddled out to pick his flowers.

TAKING things full and bye, it seemed to me that Jacques was right in deciding to retire from a field of criminal detection. Whether based on actual psychic power or close deduction, or both, his findings in the Roux case had put him under the necessity of playing unlawful arbiter of human destinies.

Whether in a war of nations or that ceaseless one against the enemies of society, the position of the franc-tireuer is not only inadmissible but dangerous. He is an unaccredited, self-appointed vigilante who is apt at any moment to catch it from either side.

In the Bogoroff case Jacques, if he had been less alert, might have got his quietus from the criminal faction; and now in this Roux one, if it were discovered that he had held back his knowledge of the actual slayer and taken steps successfully to conceal the technical guilt, not only from the police but the guilty party herself, then the police would be under the necessity of proceeding against Jacques to his very serious cost, naming him accessory after the fact.

After all, he was a successful portrait painter not officially on the police roster, and I agreed with him that he had better retire in the zenith of his fame and plead the loss of his clairvoyant power, or nervous collapse, or any other of the many excuses a subtle brain might easily devise. I doubted that the police would raise any serious objections. For, while resorting unofficially when baffled to his singular powers, they did so with reluctance. Jacques infringed upon the orthodox procedures, and I had a pretty good idea that they were no more sure about his actual method than I was myself.

Jacques frankly agreed with me. "You're right, Johnny. When it comes to the point where I see fit to stack the cards and deal out so-called justice according to my own idea of ethics of the case, I'd better quit the game."

So it seemed to be where I quit also, with the actual object of my errand to France unfulfilled. This had been not to chronicle Jacques' exploits, but to show him up as a fake. I had not managed it, though several times I had thought to have him dead to rights. And, what was more, I did not seem to be any nearer to achieving this than on the day of by arriving.

I still lingered on in Paris, having been commissioned to finish a series of articles that I had started to write on economic affairs in Europe. I saw Jacques from time to time, but with no further idea of investigating him. He was painting busily, and said that as soon as he could get through the press of work he meant to take a vacation and go to England.

Then one day when we were lunching together he said abruptly, "Back in the ring, Johnny."

"Back in what ring?" I asked.

"Criminal stuff. That is, as soon as something turns up."

"But I thought you'd made up your mind to quit."

"So I had. I'm too kind hearted to be a complete crime detector, a mental Javert. But I never was faint-hearted, even if some of you thought me so back there in that Maine district school. It's all right to make up your mind to quit provided it doesn't make you a quitter, and that's what would happen now. Read this."

He handed me a piece of paper, ordinary cheap writing paper, on which was printed legibly the following warning:

"Monsieur Hughes: Our circle has decided that you are a menace to its safety.

"We admit your ability and warn you that your services to our enemies, the police, must be discontinued. We consider them to be unfair.

"So long as you continue to mind your own business you are free to pursue in safety your career as a portrait painter. But —the next case you undertake to examine for the police will be your last. Respectfully,

"THE OUTER CIRCLE."

I handed back this polite communication.

"The same message was sent to the Surete to warn them that if they requisitioned me again and I complied it would result in my speedy removal," Jacques said. "Pervier brought it around. He said that he thought it only fair to me."

"Do they take it seriously?"

"Well—yes, even while admitting that it may just be somebody trying to get my goat. I told Pervier that under the circumstances I had the honor to request that they call me for the very next criminal case that offers itself."

"Had you already told them of your decision to quit?"

"No. But I told Pervier that the next case would be the last. He agreed that perhaps I was right."

"Well," I said, "it strikes me that they are entirely out of form to let a private citizen who has no official connection with their service expose himself to danger of this sort. After all, their function is to protect just such persons as yourself from danger and not to run them into it."

"That's what Pervier said. But I pointed out that in a criminal case it has always been a part of the procedure to call in any private citizen, however rank an outsider—the private chemist or expert on weapons or electricity, or scientist of whatever sort whom they have reason to believe may throw light on the problem, and I would seem to come in that class. And, for that matter, an agent of police with more than he can swing has a right to call in a bystander for aid, when the rendering of this aid becomes a civic duty."

"That's not what's bothering you now," I pointed out. "You are motivated by pride."

"Well, wouldn't you be in my case," Johnny?"

He had me there, as invariably he managed. I couldn't tell him that my own courageous obligation to be a reporter come three thousand miles to pry into something.

"Why do the police think this may be serious?" I asked. "Do they know anything about this 'Outer Circle' "?

"No. There's nothing in the paper nor handwritten printing to offer any clew. No finger prints nor trick lettering. They find it significant that the writer merely advises me to quit and paint my pictures and carry on as usual with no fear of attack."

It had struck me in the same way. Bogoroff's attempt on Jacques' life had been because he had decided to get Goransko and so took precautions against collateral information that might offer a clew on which to hang an indictment. But one would say that the writer of this note had no crime in view at the moment, but thought something might crop up later.

JACQUES dropped the matter abruptly then. When next I saw him, some days later, he told me in an off hand way that, just to call the bluff, he had gone over and held a seance on a bandit arrested for highway robbery with mayhem that the police already had all the goods on and no need of help.

"Isn't that just asking for trouble?" I asked.

"Well, perhaps, Johnny. But all the same it's sticking to my determination not to take the administration of so-called justice into my own hands. Now we'll see what happens."

He had just finished a portrait and asked me if I would care for a little jaunt to Le Touquet, a round of golf, and a stroll on the beach, and to spin the petits chevaux in the Casino. So to Le Touquet we went, over the road in Jacques' luxurious little car which he drove himself.

Jacques played golf a good deal as he painted, clean, dainty strokes of which the strength and precision were shown by the result. I have commented on his uncommon type of archangel beauty that was neither masculine nor feminine nor neuter; a sort of Du Maurier Martian. He was immediately identified, of course, and we came in for a good bit of attention. I say we because it had leaked out somehow that he had a satellite compatriot, press agent, if you like, but one who didn't, in the opinion of most people, do justice to his uncommon personality.

Naturally I kept a weather eye lifted for any or such as might be hostile. I had an uncomfortable feeling that if there was anything serious behind that note it would not come according to the crude method of our Balkan financier—bombs, Apache knives, and things. Neither did I think if it were coming at all it would be very long delayed, because in the meantime the writer would reason that the police would be strenuously working under the surface of things and that the French police have not yet become the negligible quantity that the increase of crime would lead one to suppose.

I suggested this to Jacques as we were at luncheon on the terrace and he agreed.

What I had banked most on was that the note might be pure bluff, to test his nerve, sent possibly by somebody of his acquaintance who wanted to determine how much of a man he was. He might believe so himself and be holding out on me, playing his everlasting gallery act. And when it came to that, I reflected that all men in whom was vested some autocratic power were constantly being threatened, and that rarely were these threats fulfilled. I knew a judge who at one time received as many threatening letters as a matinee idol does mash ones.

We finished our luncheon and strolled over to the Casino. Jacques caught sight of some people he knew, so I started to play the petits chevaux at twenty francs a shot, at that moment about a dollar and a half. I had a run of luck and when in course of nearly an hour it turned against me I quit about five hundred and odd francs ahead. Looking around then for Jacques, I caught sight of him at a table on the terrace, listening to a chic and pretty woman who was talking to him in a tense, eager way. I recognized her immediately from the portrait to which Jacques had been giving the final touches the first time I had called at his studio.

She was Madame Marquand, the intimate friend of a Madame Joliot whose portrait Jacques had also painted, and who was the daughter of the banker de Gunzville.

Jacques, glancing round at that moment, beckoned me. I went over and was presented as an old schoolmate.

"Sit down, Johnny," Jacques said, and when I had done so. "Will you please tell Madame Marquand what I have decided about my mind-reading efforts?"

I guessed immediately that Jacques' services had been requisitioned by this pretty woman to find her stolen jewels or something of the sort. So I stated briefly that Jacques had retired from so unique a field because he found it more and more difficult to reconcile his findings with the justice that must be legally applied as the result.

"It is hardly fair," I said, "to put a superhuman gift at the disposition of a human legislation that must necessarily be often limited and in some cases cruel and unmerited. On the other hand, Monsieur Hughes does not feel that he has the ethical right to protect a person whom he finds technically guilty. Besides, he might get himself into very serious difficulty by doing so. He has therefore wisely decided to withdraw from such a perplexing field and to make no exceptions whatever."

"I understand, monsieur, but this case is different, because it involves a personal friend of his who is at this moment a distracted mother. I have just received a telephone from Madame Joliot to say that her little boy of five has disappeared from the grounds of their chateau at Montreuil. She fears kidnaping."

"When did this happen?" I asked.

"Early this morning. The child had gone out into the jardin d'agrement to gather some flowers. The grounds of the chateau are surrounded by a high wall. Julie—Madame Joliot—knows I am here at Le Touquet. I heard Mr. Hughes had arrived and it seemed to me providential. I am begging him to go there with me immediately. It is only half an hour in the motor."

"But madame knows," said Jacques, "that I am not a detective in the ordinary sense. I can be of service only when brought in contact with somebody who has a part in the affair."

"That's just it," said Madame Marquand eagerly. "Julie has a new English governess, about whom she does not know as much as she should. The name of this 'mis' is Grigsby. She was in this region as B. W. A. C. during the war."

"Tommy Wack," I murmured, "and the most of them were good, but some few were wild women."

"I am rather off my form," Jacques said. "Ragged nerves and a general slump in mental keenness."

"But you must come, mon ami," Madame Marquand insisted, "if only to give Julie moral support. It sounds like kidnaping to me. The Joliots are rich enough, and besides the little boy is the only grandson of de Gunzville, who is a multi-millionaire. His father is at this moment in London on some business of de Gunzville's, with whom he is associated."

Jacques gave me a helpless look. "It is not to refuse, Johnny. But I can't promise anything. My wires are all crossed, and, besides, a mental examination is like a verbal one in certain respects. One must have something on which to pose leading mental questions."

SAME old bunk, I thought. There was no Pervier this time to give his precisely detailed and clean cut statement of facts. Nothing to go on but the frantic report of a distracted mother and the frightened testimony of rattled servants.

So here might be the real test, all hope of which I had abandoned with Jacques' decision to retire from further mental inquisitions.

There seemed no way out of it for decency with Jacques, who in the course of his portrait painting had become quite an intimate friend of the family. We three got into Madame Marquand's car, which was driven by a smart chauffeur, and were quickly at the Joliot chateau. It was an old and pretty estate, a little outside the ancient city wall of Montreuil that centuries ago before the sea receded had been a coast as well as land defense. The chateau inclosure was comparatively small, about two hectares of parc and vegetable and flower gardens and a fringe of stately old Normandy poplars in front, and the rear flanking on a grove of the other variety of poplars that are more bushy and of rapid growth, set out often by the land owner on the birth of a daughter to furnish in time her marriage dot.

As was to be expected, we found the household in a state of tension. The local gendarmerie, of course, had been notified of the disappearance of the little boy. He had gone out at eight o'clock, according to his custom, with a basket and scissors to cull a bouquet for his mother, who at the time was taking her chocolate and brioche in bed. Miss Grigsby, the governess, was at this moment getting ready the breakfast of her charge. There was nothing unusual about the performance, because at most times the child could be seen from the house and he had with him two dogs, presumably faithful guardians, though of gentle disposition, being a field spaniel and a Basset.

Madame Joliot, a handsome woman with big dark eyes, which were at this moment tragic, received us in a hushed, self-contained way. We went immediately into the garden, where there were a good many plum trees that screened some parts of it from observation. The wall inclosing it was an unusual sort of masonry, about six feet high and with the habitual pear and apricot trees trained against it, also roses and the small climbing jasmine, which mingled with the partly cultivated eglantine much like our ramblers. The only door in the wall was in plain view of the rear of the house and about a hundred feet from it, a delivery entrance that might at any moment be in use.

Our painstaking search failed to reveal anything significant, any tracks or traces on the wall. The flower basket and scissors were by a rosebush. The nearest habitation in the rear was over a furlong away beyond the poplar grove that sloped down to a sort of shallow ditch, on the other side of which was a turnip field that ran up to the rear of a small farm house.

By this time, of course—for it was then about three—the neighborhood had been combed for any news of the missing child, everybody questioned, and a general search set afoot. Many cars had passed over the Route Nationale that ran in front of the chateau, the main route from Calais and Boulogne through Abbeville for Paris. Etaples on one side, Montreuil on the other had been notified. In that open country it was incredible to believe that the child could have been thus spirited away almost under the eyes of the chateau personnel, especially as the old gardener was pottering about at the time trimming the borders of the entrance drive in front.

Miss Grigsby was, of course, the focus of our immediate attention. She was a youngish looking woman of about thirty-four or thirty-five; she had fair, gray eyes and thick, rather lusterless, khaki-colored hair, and was shapely, if a little heavy of build. Under average circumstances one would have found her rather pretty. Her type was more Saxon than Anglican, with a square face, short nose, and determined mouth. But it was plain that whatever grief and dismay she might first have felt had given place under her interrogatory to a sort of hard defensiveness.

Jacques didn't attempt to question her. He scarcely looked at her; in fact, seemed almost to ignore her. I did not blame him much, as the young woman looked to me like a hard nut to crack, mentally as well as any other way. We learned from Madame Joliot that Madame Marquand had not been quite fair in her remark that the governess was insufficiently investigated. Her references were of the best and had been verified. Before the war she had graduated from a boarding school and had taught in a girls' school in England. Her military service in that region had been resolute, efficient, and with no black marks against it. She had been engaged to a soldier killed at Ypres. Her father was an accountant in the London offices of the Baron de Gunzville, and for a while she also had done some office work there that had to do with the translation of French correspondence, but did not like the confinement and desired for the summer such a position as she now held in the Joliot household. Monsieur Joliot, learning of this wish, had suggested to his wife that she be employed as nursery governess for little Pierre.

ON our arrival Jacques had verified all of this in a brief interview with Madame Joliot, at which Madame Marquand and I were present. Then, after our cursory survey of the prem-

Coincidences and Hunches

—By—
PIERRE VAN PAASSEN

ONE day on the Ypres front the battalion to which I belonged was ordered "over the top" and at the appointed zero hour promptly started to storm the enemy trenches. When we had just about reached the parapets of their first line, the foemen climbed out of their own underground defenses and came to meet us in a solid mass of fixed bayonets. My own recollections of that moment are somewhat hazy because the day wound up for me with a rifle blow over the head, which rendered me unconscious at the time and temporarily bald three weeks after. Still I remember that one bearded individual came running toward me intent on impaling me on his pin and that I could hear myself scream above the din of the moment.

Now the bayonet instructor had given me, like all other soldiers, a thorough instruction on how to act in a bayonet attack, how to parry blows, deliver a short point or long point, shove the thing in a man's chest, putting your right foot on him and winding up by putting your other foot on him to extract the bayonet. But practice is a little different from theory, as others have remarked ere this. At any rate I never saw the German, Englishman, nor anyone else, who wanted to submit so lamblike to this little experiment. And when I saw the blond bearded one come toward me, I not only screamed in terror, but he did the same thing. In a fit of desperation I lifted my rifle and brought it down ax-wise on the man's bayonet, that was already perilously near my solar-plexus. The bayonet snapped in two and with a lightning-like movement the man stuck up his two hands shouting: "Kamerad, drei Kinder, drei Kinder" (I surrender! three children, three children). The last I saw of him was when he was walking down to our rear.

* * * * *

NOT long ago I was sipping a glass of tea and holding the sugar between my teeth Russian fashion, with a Roumanian writer in the Cafe Royal on Second avenue when I suddenly noticed a certain familiar touch about the waiter at a nearby table. A moment later this waiter and a colleague of his had a collision in which some glasses were spilled and a few harsh words spoken. When I heard the voice a sudden flash of recollection shot through my brain. He was the fellow I had once seen at Ypres.

* * * * *

WHEN he passed my table again I suddenly asked him: "Well, how are the three children?" He looked at me quizzically for a moment and then beat his hands together and shook his head in sheer wonderment and amazement. I had to repeat the question: "How are the three Kinder?" He began to laugh. "There are five now," he said, "and two owe their lives to you." I was never so happy over anything I did during the four years at the front than to spare the life of that fellow, though I haven't told him yet I was as scared of him at our first meeting as he was of me.

* * * * *

THE world is not so big a place after all. I was walking along with Konrad Bercovici when he met a man, whom he had known in Transylvania. There he had been a student for the rabbinate wearing side curls and whiskers; a strict observer of all the Levitical laws, a sort of Puritan as it were. Here in New York he was a barber and played the tuba in a jazz orchestra in an East-side pleasure haunt at nights.

* * * * *

WE are often content with describing such extraordinary meetings as coincidences. I don't know if that is the right word to use in such instances. Often it seems as if some hidden force is arranging things, guiding the wanderer on his path through life, confronting him with the most unexpected situations or pulling him out again by the very skin of his teeth. "Good luck" we say then and I don't know if that either is the right word to use in such connections.

* * * * *

I DON'T know anything about the science of telepathy, nor of occultism or thought transference, but still I have heard of so many instances of super-normal communication from credible witnesses that I have become convinced that little in this world is mere coincident or a streak of luck or what is commonly known as a hunch or presentiment.

* * * * *

I KNOW a woman whose three sons were killed in the war. She lived three hundred miles behind the front. But she told her daughter in every instance that she felt one of her sons had died. And without fail the official notification from the French government: "Your son is dead for France" followed in each instance. Yet the mother had known it even before the brigade adjutant had drawn up the list of casualties. Was that just a hunch on the mother's part? I can't believe it.

WARNINGS of death are perhaps the most frequent instances of transmission of news. Nearly every family history has a couple of examples where someone had either dreamed or had his or her thoughts centered on some member of the family far away, only to hear a few days afterward that the person about whom the dream had been or on whom the thoughts had been centered had died at the moment when the dreaming or thinking had been going on. Yet can we call that mere coincidence? It's a facile and unscientific evasion to dismiss the question that way, it seems to me.

* * * * *

THE rector of Rheims cathedral, the magnificent edifice that was destroyed during the war, once told me that he had a very dear friend, a parish priest serving with the armies. He had a photo of the friend hanging in his study. One night while the rector was reading, the photo of his friend crashed to the floor, scattering the glass fragments in all directions. So convinced was Monsignor Landrieuz that this meant the death of his friend that he immediately knelt down and recited the prayers for the dead. Confirmation came two weeks later. The hour of death was the same in which the picture had fallen from the wall.

* * * * *

ONE could go on duplicating these instances a hundred times. But that does not mean one would ever reach a satisfactory explanation for them. The human mind, however, is of a curious and inquiring turn. It wants to lift the veil, it wants to know the unseen forces of the ether. But

Glimpses of Hollywood

—By—
ROSALIND SHAFFER

POLA NEGRI has had one more heartbreak added to her emotional education and Hollywood's sharpest triangle has been reduced by one side, or one angle as the geometry wr s decide.

. ola has owned a dearly beloved Pomeranian of beautiful white, named Teddy. Teddy was a mischief-making canine, but in spite of the embarrassments and expenses caused by his pranks, Pola loved him dearly, much to the envy of Rod LaRoque.

A recent sunny afternoon in Beverly Hills found the trio in an argument; Rod wanted Pola to sit on his lap, Teddy wanted to sit on Rod's lap and Pola wanted Teddy to sit on her lap. A phone call took Pola from the room and while she was gone the maid overheard violent quarreling. Later the yard showed signs of a terrific struggle and Teddy was found in a dying condition, his tonsils stabbed with the "T" of a T-bone steak. Pola spent the night by her dog's bedside and his agony was equalled only by Pola's anguish. At dawn he passed on.

For three days Pola was inconsolable, but it is rumored that Rod had his most serious competitor for Pola's affection eliminated and at a late hour when he was found at his residence, as he lit a cigarette Rod made the cryptic remark, "Watch my smoke."

CHARLES CHAPLIN and Michael Arlen were driving along Sunset boulevard near Vine, where the Lasky studio is located, on Thursday afternoon when Charlie's big English auto was bumped by a truck. When Arlen and Chaplin alighted to enter the studio and call a cab to go on their interrupted journey Chaplin was asked if there were any casualties. "None," replied Charlie, "except to the afternoon's program."

Arlen is working busily on an adaptation of one of his stories, "The Ace of Cads," from his book "Mayfair," to be used for a picture.

Jack Holt, back from location on "The Enchanted Hill," made in the Mojave desert (pronounced Moahawvey) is telling a story about his little boy Timmy, aged 6, who was with him in the making of the film and played the role of a Mexican boy. It was the junior Holt's first role in a picture.

Timmy now is the admired one of all the little boys on his street and his first day home Jack overheard this one: A seven-year-old on the other side of the picket fence stuck his nose through and asked: "Well, Timmy, what's doin' at the studio nowadays for yuh?"

"Oh," answered Timmy with a blase air, "I just got back from being a Moroccan in the Mahogany desert."

FRIDAY afternoon at Lasky's studio Adolphe Menjou breezed through in his characteristic busy manner clad in a gorgeous hand-knitted white, red, blue, tan, yellow and black golf sweater, knickers, etc. He was arrested by the sight of Greta Nissen, just off her set for "The Golden Journey," in which she is playing the role of a slave girl.

About a yard of chiffon with a silver binding made Greta's original costume which was accompanied by silver anklets with little tinkling bells thereon. But most of the costume had been torn off her back by the rough slave auctioneer and Greta had providently wrapped herself in another yard of green chiffon which, with her long blonde wig clothed her rather more than one usually sees her clothed in her picture roles. Adolphe stopped long enough to opine that if Greta ever was given a costume in which there was more than a yard of cloth she would smother to death.

THIS was a week of notable openings. Marion Davies in "Lights of Old New York" attracted a large crowd of picture celebrities to Loew's State theater on Monday night.

Lew Cody and Donald Ogden Stewart acted as joint introducers of the celebrities present, Lew introducing Stewart as a mind reader and with outrageously obvious and funny hints got Donald to name the notables one by one at which said notable got a spot, though Charley Ray had to call for his, and made appropriate bows.

Tom Mix, for once not startling as to haberdashery and tailoring, was accompanied by Mrs. Mix in yellow chiffon, ermine cape with red fox collar. Bebe Daniels wore gold lace trimmed with marten and a gold wrap. Eleanor Boardman appeared in violet chiffon with a wrap made of a Spanish shawl and ermine. Renee Adoree was dressed in flame chiffon and flame velvet wrap.

Norma Shearer in green chiffon wore an orange velvet cape with sable. Aileen Pringle was in peach chiffon with a sable wrap. Pauline Starke was vivid in red velvet with an ermine wrap. Sally O'Neill, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's flapper, fluttered in flesh chiffon and a flesh velvet cape. Claire Windsor was lovely in pale blue velvet and pearls and an ermine wrap.

Carmel Myers wore white velvet covered with iridescent beads and a blue velvet wrap trimmed with ermine. Gertrude Olmstead was striking in white chiffon trimmed with silver lace and an orchid velvet wrap trimmed with gray fox. Mae Busch appeared in sapphire blue velvet with a chinchilla wrap. Leatrice Joy had a dress of white lace over white chiffon and a white ermine wrap with silk fringe.

Mrs. Charles Spencer Chaplin wore white satin with crystal embroidery and a white silk coat trimmed with white fox and heavily embroidered. Madame Elinor Glyn was arrayed in white velvet with a magenta cape trimmed in sable. Bill Hart, Charles Chaplin with his wife and Miss Davies and Messrs. Thalberg, Rapf and Mayer, the trio introduced by the facetious Lew as "the unholy three," also were present.

A SECOND affair that attracted much attention was the Masquer's Revel, the first event by the newly organized club of actors which hopes to be the west coast Lambs' club and which numbers many of the Lambs' club members. The affair was to raise funds for the club's permanent home. After its disastrous postponement from the preceding week due to canceling by school authorities of a permit to use the Hollywood high school auditorium stage because of objection to Fatty Arbuckle the Masquer's Revel fell on the same night as Mary Pickford's opening in "Little Annie Roonie."

The revel was a lively affair and Arbuckle during his comedy stunts, drew much applause. He was asked "Are you an actor?" "I need to be," Fatty replied, creating a five-minute guffaw. Fatty was a Gypsy Chorus Maiden, in full skirt and wig doing his demure steps while Julian Eltinge, in skirts and Walter Fidgeon in Rus-

Should these girls wear more clothes?

Statue of "Civic Virtue" in front of New York's city hall —a singularly inappropriate piece of sculpture for the metropolis, the city's critics think

THE morals of the great city of New York are ,as everybody knows, being made the target for the severest kind of criticism. It comes from all directions, from all sorts and conditions of people. While it is impossible to say just how numerous New York's critics are, it seems reasonable to believe that they outnumber the city's 6,000,000 population by many millions.

Not since the Old Testament days of Sodom and Gomorrah, very probably, has any city been more widely and scathingly denounced for its alleged wickedness and corrupting influence on its neighbors. New York is called the modern counterpart of those infamous cities of the plain which became so steeped in sin that, as we are told in the Book of Genesis, they were wiped out of existence with "fire and brimstone from the Lord out of heaven."

Curiously Perplexing Problems Raised by the Widespread Belief in the Wickedness of This "Modern Counterpart of Sodom and Gomorrah" and Its Corrupting Influence on the Rest of the Nation

In a recent report the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal church declares it a serious question whether the people of America, in allowing New York to attain its gigantic size and power, have not saddled themselves with a fearful Frankenstein.

"The whole country has assailed the indecency of a certain large group of magazines and of the products of certain popular novel writers," says the report. "Most of this nastiness is coming out of New York city.

"Fully two years ago there was a nationwide outburst of indignation over the character of theatrical exhibitions emanating from New York city. Particular objection was had to nakedness, profanity, blasphemy and obscenity in these productions. Now the word comes from New York that the present season is to be the profanest and nakedest in American history.

The "spirit of undress" as exemplified in a current New York musical play

"From New York emanates most of the propaganda inciting to violation of the prohibition law and attacking the standards of Americanism which Greenwich Village calls 'Puritanism.'

"No great city in the world has a larger group of high minded, patriotic, intelligent business men than New York. They have considered themselves, and the country has been glad to consider them, custodians of the financial power of the country and its leaders in social development.

"But recently the great mass of un-American people which plagues that city have seemingly found that they are in actual majority and are convinced that they do not need to consider those with American habits of life within the city's borders, nor those with 'puritanical' habits of thought out in the vast spaces where, in their opinion, the Indians howl and the buffaloes roam.

"If New York has the safety of its own future in mind, it will apply pressure upon theatrical producers, publishers of erotic literature and propagandists of crime."

WITH these drastic views millions of earnest Americans seem to be in perfect agreement. But when it comes to the question of what shall be done with naughty New York—how it shall be punished for its sins and made to cease sinning—there is no such unanimity.

While millions of the city's critics are agreed that, in its present depravity, it is a cancer in the nation's side, hardly any two of them can agree on a plan for cutting out this malignant growth and preventing its spreading more corruption throughout the country.

The problems of disciplining a city of 6,000,000 people, a city that pays half the nation's income tax and whose financial interests are intimately bound up with those of the furthermost farms and villages, is a curiously perplexing one.

It is complicated by the fact that a large part of the city's native born population was born outside the city —a high percentage of them in the very sections where New York is being most loudly denounced.

Another complication is presented by the large number of out of town visitors New York is continually entertaining. Every day there arrive in the metropolis more than 100,000 Americans, coming from all parts of the country for more or less extended business and pleasure stays.

If many of these visitors are greatly distressed by the conditions they find in New York they keep the fact well concealed. They crowd the theaters where the most criticized plays and musical shows are given. They are liberal patrons of the hundreds of cafes, restaurants and night clubs where the prohibition law is openly violated.

All this means a serious question as to whether the views voiced by the Methodist church board would, if submitted to a popular referendum, receive the indorsement of anything like a majority of the nation's voters.

Can it be possible that millions of Americans who live under strict moral regimes in their home towns really enjoy having a wide open New York in which they can take refuge now and then and have a great deal more personal liberty than is allowed where they live?

This is a disturbing thought to those who feel that New York is a cancer that ought to be cut from the nation's side without delay.

When national prohibition came, its champions believed this would pave the way for additional amendments to the constitution that would enable them to regulate the morals of New York in numerous other ways. But they are not sure of their ability to force the city into what they regard as righteousness since they have seen how the Volstead act is failing to stop the sale and drinking of alcoholic beverages there.

As soon as the federal officials padlock one of the law breaking cafes that line whole streets it seems as if a score of new ones at once open their doors. Even the most casual visitor is able to see how high the tide of forbidden booze is running and how flagrantly the Volstead act is being disobeyed.

New York's contempt for the prohibition law and the bad example this sets the nation form one of the chief counts in the present indictment of the city. The recent Methodist report declares that many communities would be practically free from law violations were it not for the insidious anti-prohibition propaganda reaching them from New York.

In times gone by it was nothing unusual for great cities to be destroyed and their populations put to death or exiled when they failed to please the king or emperor.

TODAY in the United States it is a majority of citizens that is king and has practically unlimited power. In fact, it is often charged that, through the peculiar workings of our political system and the failure of many citizens to go to the polls, even a strong and well organized minority can impose its will on the nation.

Will the forces that are so bitterly denouncing New York be able to muster enough strength to write into the constitution and the federal statutes laws that will undertake to compel the city to cease its naughtiness and be good?

Will they undertake, as has been actually suggested, to boycott the metropolis economically and socially—to have nothing to do with its people in business or society?

And what will New York do in that event? Will it reform or will it defy laws and boycott just as it is now charged with defying the prohibition of alcohol?

Many radical prohibitionists have repeatedly urged that the whole strength of the army and navy should be called into use to enforce the Volstead act and make the country really bone dry. Doubtless just such a plan would be urged if the city resisted federal attempts to curb New York's naughtiness by a boycott by sweeping constitutional amendments and stringent laws.

A civil war between New York and the rest of the nation—to picture what such a struggle might prove is worthy of the pen of a Jules Verne or an H. G. Wells.

It would doubtless be a very unequal conflict and the soldiers of the national army would soon be sweeping through New York's streets much as the storm of fire and brimstone swept through Sodom and Gomorrah.

New York is, of course, well equipped enough with wealth to foot the bills for a dozen long and costly wars. It is strategically located partly on islands, surrounded by ocean, river and sound. Doubtless it would be able to gain possession of the powerful range guns that line its harbor and turn them on its enemies.

But it is in its food supply that the city is very, very vulnerable.

Just as the rest of the country depends on New York for financial backing and the creation of markets for its products, so New York depends on the country outside for almost everything it needs to eat. If the national army and navy were able to invest New York with an effective blockade it could starve the city into submission within three or four days.

Managers, playwrights and others connected with the theater are frank to admit that there is, just as the Methodist board charges, more nudity on the New York stage this season than ever before. But they declare they can see in this no reason for calling the city a corrupting "cancer" and demanding that it be promptly knifed out of the nation's side.

The present fashion for nudity had a curious origin. It started late last summer when a prominent New York producer, on getting a look at a "try-out" of his musical revue, saw that it was unbearably dull and almost dead sure to prove a "flop."

To avoid the heavy financial loss which the failure of this expensive production would mean he decided he must enliven the production in some novel and astonishing way. The idea hit upon was to order the entire chorus to strip for the opening night.

THE order reached the stage just as the girls were forming behind the curtain for the opening scene. Faced with the possibility of losing their jobs after weeks of rehearsal without pay, all of the cast complied.

In a moment, the already scanty costumes were ripped off and tossed into the wings, each girl reserving a wisp of chiffon for protection from the cruel stares of the firstnighters.

The show was heralded the following morning as the most daring exhibition ever presented on a New York stage. Indeed, the reviews were of such a nature that the second night's performance was largely populated by the police.

But the manager had anticipated court action by restoring the girls' costumes for the following performances, and so a very dull show was made extremely profitable by the demand for seats created by the first night's reviews.

Other musical show producers took the hint and nudity has lately become the predominal feature.

It is a curious fact that many Methodist clergymen living and preaching in New York, do not indorse their church's official denunciation of the city's alleged wickedness. One of these is the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner.

"New York is not a 'modern Gomorrah,'" Dr. Reisner asserts. "Traveling secretaries who come here with preconceived notions and judge us by the loose habits of our visitors ought to be unseated from places of influence when they make wholesale charges against our city."

But the Rev. Dr. J. C. Howard, a Methodist clergyman of the nearby city of Newark, N. J., thinks the facts emphasized by the board are thoroughly well founded and that the proposed social and economic boycott of New York and its people as a punishment for their naughtiness is about the sanest method by which to correct conditions.

But what if New York manages to survive such a boycott? Will war be the next step in the effort to punish the city and make it be good?

V. The Larger Life.

W. J. BRYAN

WHILE Christ was all love and all compassion and all tenderness He never hesitated to draw the line and draw it rigidly against folly as well as against sin. The parable of the Ten Virgins is a case in point. Five were wise and five were foolish, the evidence of the difference being found in the fact that five were prudent enough to supply themselves with oil sufficient for an emergency. The other five, lacking wisdom, took only the oil that they could carry in their lamps. When the need came the foolish turned to the wise and said, "Give us of your oil," but the wise refused lest they should not have enough for themselves and the others. Were they censured? No. The parable teaches one of the most important lessons to be learned in life, namely, that the foolish cannot be saved from punishment. It is punishment that converts folly into wisdom and saves the world from a race of fools.

The parable has widespread application. The foolish parent cannot be saved from the sorrow inflicted by a spoiled child; the idle cannot be saved from hunger and want; the lazy cannot be given the rewards of the diligent. The success that attends effort and rewards character cannot be awarded to the undeserving without paralyzing all the incentives to virtue and industry. Christ came not to destroy the law—either that revealed in the Word of God or that which was written on nature—He came to fulfill. In the brief years that He taught His disciples and the multitude He quoted the law and illustrated it. He did not come to relieve men of responsibility—He came to light the way—"That they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly."

Christ's doctrines are not limited in time or to numbers. They apply to everybody and last for all time. Paul, in Romans 12:20, interprets the Master's teachings and applies them. "Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." How different this way of dealing from the way the carnal man acts, and yet who can question the wisdom of the Savior's plan? Hatred begets hatred; retaliation invites retaliation and the feud grows. The mountains of Kentucky have furnished numerous illustrations of the futility of revenge. Families were arrayed against families and sons took up inherited hatreds and died violent deaths bequeathing the spirit of revenge to their descendants.

See False Philosophy.

We see the same false philosophy at work among nations. One war lays the foundation for another; generation after generation is sworn to avenge the crimes of preceding generations; and much of it is done in the name of patriotism and glorified as if it were service to the country.

Paul gives us the remedy and it is based upon the injunction that Jesus gave, namely, Love your enemies. Feeding an enemy is more effective than threats of punishments. It is a manifestation of love, and love is the weapon for which there is no shield. The philosophy that Paul applies to the individual is just as effective when applied to larger groups. Nations that have been at war cannot be reconciled by the methods of war. They can be suppressed by force but unless won by friendship there can be no reunion.

Paul concluded this chapter with a command "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." There never was a time in the world's history when this kind of doctrine was more imperatively needed for the healing of the wounds of the unprecedented conflict through which the world has just passed. Christ has a remedy; Let the wrongs of the past be forgiven and forgotten; let the world be invited to build on friendship and cooperation. Let the rivalry be in the showing of magnanimity. Who dares to say that the plan will fail? The alternative policy has failed and failed miserably. Why not employ the only untried remedy for the ills which afflict civilization?

Gifts Are Permanent.

And the gifts of the Man of Galilee are permanent; they survive the tomb. As one nears the end of life he becomes conscious of an inner longing to attach himself to institutions that will outlive him. His affections having gone out to his fellows, and his heart having entwined itself with the causes that embrace all humankind, he does not like to drop out and be forgotten. His sympathies expand and sympathy is the real blood of the heart, forced by the pulsations of that major organ through all the arteries of society. Have you thought how few of each generation are remembered after death by any one outside of a small circle of friends? We have a hundred millions of people living in the largest republic in history—one of the greatest nations the world has ever known—and yet how many names will survive for a century after those who bore the names are buried? The vanity of man is rebuked by a visit to any old, neglected cemetery. As Bryan puts it

"The world will laugh when thou art gone
And solemn brood of care plod on
And each one as before will chase his favorite phantom."

It is partly to escape this dread oblivion that men and women, blessed with means, endow hospitals and colleges and charitable institutions. They yearn for an immortality on earth as well as in the world beyond, and nothing but the spiritual has promise of the life everlasting.

Body Changes.

If we examine our expense accounts we will be ashamed to note how large a proportion of our money we spend on the body. We buy it the food that it most enjoys, and the raiment that most adorns it; we give it habitations of comfort and beauty, and yet the body is responsible for most of our easily besetting sins and its aches and pains fill life with much of its misery. We spend the first twenty years of life in an effort to develop the body, the second twenty years of life in an effort to keep it in a state of health and twenty more trying to preserve it from decline, and then the threescore years have passed. And, no matter how successful we may be in lifting the body toward physical perfection, we have no assurance that any physical perfection can be made use of in the world above. I believe in the resurrection of the

Non-Theistic Theories of the Universe

Rev. W. P. King

THE claim of agnosticism is that we cannot know ultimate reality, but only phenomenal appearances. The agnostic says that he does not know and knows that he does not know, and yet asserts that he knows that no one else knows. There is the mixture of presumption and dogmatism with extreme humility. G. K. Chesterton writes: "We are on the road to producing a race too mentally modest to believe in the multiplication table. We are in danger of seeing philosophers who doubt the law of gravity as being a mere fancy of their own. Scoffers of old time were too proud to be convinced; but these are too humble to be convinced. . . . What we suffer from today is humility in the wrong place. Modesty has moved from the organ of aspiration. Modesty had settled upon the organ of conviction, where it was never meant to be. The old humility was a spur that prevented a man from stopping; not a nail in his boot that prevented him from going on.

"For the old humility made a man doubtful about his efforts, which might make his work harder. But the new humility makes a man doubtful about his aims, which will make him stop working altogether."

Agnosticism is the destruction of all knowledge, since it not only cannot know anything but cannot know that it cannot know. Agnosticism commits intellectual suicide and then refuses to quit talking. Deism says that there is a God but he does not speak to men in a spiritual revelation. This is to make God less than good.

Agnosticism says that if there is a God, He cannot make Himself known. This is to make God the symbol of absolute weakness. Even a helpless infant has power enough to make its presence known. Has God left no unmistakable trace of Himself in the universe?

Dr. W. N. Clarke writes: "If the sum of existence contained no signs of intellect, and had never nourished a mind, if it were a dull and senseless mass, dead matter and brute force, without movement or meaning, then, perhaps we might think that no mind had even thought it through; which would be the largest thought about it that had ever been entertained. But of the universe that exists we can imagine no such thing. It has structure and order, and method is its prime characteristic. It is so full of ideas in operation that all human study has only begun to find them out. It has provided material for all the systematic knowledge that men possess, and suggestion for all their finer thought. Nay, it has brought forth man himself, and trained him to his present rationality and is training him still. And shall we now call such a universe an unthought thing? Or shall we say that we can form no judgment as to whether it has ever been embraced in a perfect comprehension? By all progress in science and philosophy and all vitality in poetry and art, by the significance of life and the effectiveness of experience as an instructor, the world commends itself to us as a world known before we knew it, and understood better than we can ever understand it. The facts are convincing, and we are quite competent to be convinced."

I think it might just as well be admitted here that religious dogmatists have gone to as great an extreme in their profession of knowledge as agnostics have in their profession of ignorance.

THEOLOGIANS have discussed in accents of absolute certainty the mind of God in His purposes and decrees. They have professed a profound acquaintance with all the deliberations of the three persons of the Trinity. They have endeavored to analyze the mind of God as minutely as a chemist might analyze a drop of water.

If the agnostic fails to recognize the limitation of his ignorance, the religious dogmatist has failed to realize the limitation of his knowledge.

St. Paul expresses the proper balance between these two types of mind:

"Now I know in part"—

Our knowledge is limited, but nevertheless we have knowledge.

The vast margin of mystery cannot amount to the negation of knowledge, when every blade of grass is an insoluble riddle and every relationship of mind and body is the perplexity of all psychologists. In spite of all mysteries we are brought face to face with the clear-cut alternative that the universe is either the sport of blind chance or the product of intelligent purpose. We can conceive of no middle ground.

"If chance could fashion but a little flower
With perfume for each tiny thief,
And furnish it with sunshine and with shower,
Then chance would be Creator with the power
To build a world for unbelief."

Agnosticism occupies an unstable position. For the most part agnostics are atheists with merely a different spelling. On the part, however, of some who are termed agnostics, there is the decided leaning towards theism. Kant in his failure to find God through pure reason, falls back on the practical reason and affirms God, freedom and immortality.

Mr. Spencer makes the confession: "Were we compelled to choose between the alternatives of speaking in terms of matter or spirit, the latter alternative would seem the more acceptable of the two."

Prof. Huxley writes: "The position that there is nothing in the world but matter, force and necessity, is as utterly devoid of justification as the most baseless of theological dogmas."

John Stuart Mill was a leader among the agnostics of his day. In his posthumous essay, he says: "It appears to me that the indulgence of hope with regard to the government of the universe and the destiny of men after death, while we recognize as a clear truth that we have no ground for more than a hope, is legitimate and philosophically defensible." In an essay on Mill, Wilfred Ward writes: "Mr. Leslie Stephens was reported to have paced the room with indignation, which could not be contained, while his wife yet further angered him by the poor consolation of, 'I told you so; I always said John Mill was orthodox.'"

Huxley, inventor of the very word "agnostic," consents that the name of God together with a hope of immortality should appear on his tombstone in an inscription written by his wife and approved by himself.

Spencer declared of religion: "The matter is one which concerns each and all of us more than any other matter whatever."

Broadway Banter

AS NOEL COWARD chances to be the most discussed person in New York these days, it occurred to me it was high time that I meet and interview him. Mr. Coward, in case you've forgotten, wrote and takes the lead in the biggest success of the season, "The Vortex," also wrote the delightful "Hay Fever," is responsible for much of the past and forthcoming "Charlot's Revues," and has in preparation for later in the season Jane Cowl in "Easy Virtue," Nazimova in "Nadya," another play called "Fallen Angels," and a revue, "On With the Dance," in which Delysia will appear. If you're planning to come to New York any time soon, you must learn to saturate your conversation with "Noel Coward this" and "Noel Coward that" or you'll find yourself hopelessly out of the swing of things. Nobody is going to listen to what you thought about "If Winter Comes."

As I'm confident the "where were you born and why" type of interview is now a thing of the past, I decided to get Mr. Coward to talk about our theaters and movies. This interesting Englishman tells me he thinks our "They Knew What They Wanted" is a marvelous play, and he agreed with me about the excellence of Glenn Ander's performance. When we got on the subject of movies, he told me "Doug" Fairbanks was his favorite, and he thinks Ramon Navarro is an excellent actor. Ernst Lubitsch he considers the best director in pictures. Moreover, he brought joy to my heart when he said he thought that old-timer, Pauline Frederick, had it all over her younger sister-players, and that personally he'd love to see her play the mother in "The Vortex," on the speaking stage. At the time of talking to Mr. Coward I wish I'd known Mrs. Jarnagin was going to read his "Vortex" before the Atlanta Drama league. I could have then assured him "Pie's" reading would have been everything and more than he could have wished for. Where, oh where, did Mrs. Jarnagin get that nick-name?

At the end of our conversation, it leaked out that Mr. Coward is five months younger than I am! And so to prove that I have lost none of my "freshness" since leaving Atlanta, I said in my jauntiest manner, "Well, son, come to me when you're my age and I'll tell you a few things you should know."

I have not yet decided just what Mr. Coward meant when he quickly turned to me and said, "You look very much to me as though you could!"

* * * *

VIRGINIA and "Robby" Robinson were among the Atlantans I saw present the night I attended Channing Pollock's new play, "The Enemy." In the same audience I also saw the honeymooning Louis Muldrows, the former Helen Brown being about the tenth Atlanta person who has told me they liked "Louis the 14th" far better than any other New York show. Lynn Werner, so I'm told, crept stealthily into town recently and remained two whole days without my being aware of it. This I regret very much, for had I seen him and engineered it properly, he should have been good for a meal. The Walton Forgys, whom I, being of the old school, am still calling Erskine Jarnagin and Sam Forgy, were guilty of spending a few days of their honeymoon here. I have just received a belated message that "Mr. Esmonde Brady called" and at some hour when neither teas, dinners, the theaters or night clubs are in progress, I may be able to catch him on the wire. Can it be the presence of Mr. Brady in New York around Halloween-Ball time explains why there was no this year's Debutante Table at the Driving club? No debut made without the presence of Mr. Brady could ever be considered legal.

Among Us Georgians

—By—
W. C. WOODALL

A MEMBER of a prominent Georgia church was on trial, the issue being whether or not he should be turned out of the church. There were three "counts" against him in the general charges, and none of them involved immorality or anything against his character. He was charged—and it was true—that he had taken church matters into the courthouse. It was proposed to move the church to a new location in the city and this particular member had earnestly opposed it and had filed injunction proceedings to prevent this step being taken. He was also charged with being unduly hostile to the pastor. He admitted that he thought the pastor should resign, but did not think he himself should be turned out of the church simply because he held to this opinion, and was not in harmony with the pastor along other lines.

With all these charges and countercharges, and with the merits of the several contentions, this chronicle has nothing whatever to do; singly and collectively they all have our goodwill 100 per cent, and we wish them well. These few lines relate to the trial of the brother referred to, who is a prominent business man in his home city and a member of four boards, all of them of a charitable or philanthropic nature.

The church had 800 to 1,000 members, and perhaps 600 of them were present on the day of the trial. The charges were presented and then the member on trial made his statement; making a pretty good witness for the "prosecution," in some of his very candid statements and criticisms. It may be stated at this point that the pastor was not present at this particular Sunday morning service as the situation had been so delicate and personal that he felt that an outside minister, some one not involved in the controversy at all, should preside.

When the time for balloting came, two hundred members voted to turn the brother out, one hundred voted to let him retain membership, and perhaps 300 declined to take part in the proceedings. This meant that his connection with the church had officially and legally terminated. Incidentally, the court proceedings then pending would automatically come to an end, as the petitioner, not being a member of the church, would have no standing in court.

"What are you going to do?" a friend asked of the ejected brother.

"My course is clear," he replied. Advancing to the front, he placed his hand in that of the officiating minister and said:

"Brother ——, I have been a member of this church since I was sixteen years of age. I do not feel natural out of it—do not feel right. As you know, there will be no service in this church tonight. I cannot wait until next Sunday to join—I want to unite with this church right now. I come to you as a sinner, seeking the light—as perhaps the chief of sinners. Is my application accepted?"

The visiting clergyman, quite surprised and rather embarrassed by this wholly unexpected turn of events, said:

"Why, Brother, this is a most unusual situation, and I hardly know what to say."

In this particular denomination an elder, as well as a pastor, is authorized to receive members into the church.

The ejected brother turned quickly to an elder standing nearby, one of the leaders of the faction that brought charges against him, and said:

"I come as a sinner—perhaps the chief of sinners—knocking at the door of this church for admission. I need the church and cannot stay out of it. Is the door of the church open to me?"

Visibly embarrassed, the elder said: "I hardly know what to do."

"You can do only one of two things: Accept me or reject me," said the applicant for church membership.

Nearby was another elder of the church—a friendly elder, so to speak, one who had voted with the minority on the issue of severance of church membership. The deported brother walked up to him and said with great solemnity:

"As a sinner—perhaps the chief of sinners—I am applying for membership in this church. With a humble and contrite heart I submit this application. Do you take me in?"

"We certainly do—and gladly," replied the friendly elder. And the brother was once more reinstated in full membership rights and privileges.

It all ended happily enough, and in a way that will result in increasing prosperity and usefulness for the denomination in that Georgia city. For shortly after this church trial, the gentleman who had been turned out of the church and then taken back went to the leader of the other faction and proposed a compromise and a division of property. The suggestion was accepted and valuable property was harmoniously divided. A portion of the congregation swarmed off to another section of the city, the section to which they had wished the church moved, and there built a church of their own. About half the congregation remained at the original church. Both congregations are live and working and both are doing well, serving acceptably their respective sections of the city. Each church has a membership of approximately 500. One of them had revival services recently, resulting in 58 new members being received into the church.

So, in the language of the classics, all's well that ends well.

IN DETROIT, the other day, Frank T. Reynolds, of Atlanta, was talking with a Michigan millionaire, one of the many influential northern business men met by the Georgia delegation during the meanderings of the Dixie motorcade.

"Has Georgia any minerals?" this gentleman asked in the course of the conversation.

"Do you know how many commercial minerals there are in the United States?" Mr. Reynolds in turn asked.

"I do not, although I have mineral interests," was the reply.

"There are twenty-six commercial minerals in this country," said the Georgian, "and just one Georgia

Taking the Rocky Road

—By— DORIS BLAKE

HOLLYWOOD, CAL. — Hazel Keener won a beauty contest prize of $1,000 and the title of Iowa's most beautiful girl about five years ago. Contests with movie contract plums were not so commonplace five years ago as today. How rich and juicy the plums are today is a debatable question. Sometimes, it is true, a contest winner succeeds only in upsetting the course of her life for a brief period, to be thrown back into the regular channels of job seeking, a disillusioned young person. And again, entrance gained via the beauty contest route may lead to the hiring of a publicity agent, a Hollywood bungalow, a sports roadster, and fame. It has been done.

But for the benefit of the young women who think it one quick leap from obscurity to fame, with no intervening hardships, Miss Keener's experience may shed an interesting light. Her approach on Hollywood was in a day when beauty contest winners were not numbered by the hundreds. To have been voted the most beautiful girl in a state meant more then than it does today to casting directors. But the path wasn't lined with roses any more those days than it is now.

"As the winner of the $1,000 prize from The Chicago Tribune and the title of Iowa's most beautiful girl, my mother and I set out for Hollywood," confides Miss Keener. "We arrived with exactly $26.50 in cash. There were expenses to be met before we departed, a wardrobe to be bought, and $300 to be applied on a little farm we were buying for my invalid father in Missouri.

"I did not expect immediate success. I knew I should have to work hard for anything I might achieve. But I had no conception of the hard struggles and privations one encounters on this high road to fame. If I had realized the experiences I was to go through I would never have had the courage to tackle it. How true is that old adage: Ignorance is bliss for a career in pictures has more ups and downs than the busiest elevator in a business building.

"One of the directors told me early in the game that there were more heartaches in this profession than in any other. I believe it. The more sensitive a person, the harder the bumps seem. One of the most difficult things I had to learn was how to let unkind criticism slide over my head; also, how to take criticism given in the right way for what it was worth in correcting my mistakes. Constructive criticism is more helpful than praise, even though it is harder to take "My first picture engagement was doubling for a star. I had to do a boat scene, dressed in her clothes. Doubling is dangerous work, and consequently affords better pay for a beginner than ordinary extra work. I couldn't swim, but needed the $15 a day, so I took it. It was an interesting experience, except that my first view of the Pacific was accompanied by an accidental overturning of the boat, and I had to be fished out of the water, terrorized because I could not swim.

"This engagement did not come until I had spent days and weeks acquainting myself with the locations of the various studios, for, contrary to my expectations, they were not grouped together, but scattered as much as 10 and 15 miles apart, which meant sore and aching feet, as often I could not afford to ride. I found the fact of my having won a beauty contest gained me admittance to the casting directors, but that was all. The letters of introduction served the same purpose, but did not materially aid me, as I had no actual experience. That was the wall I bumped into everywhere. 'We can't do anything for you until you have had experience. Come back then, and we can use you.' What a problem! To gain the necessary experience when no one seemed willing to give me the opportunity to do so!

"Finally I was called for a set during the holidays. I reported five days

It Is the Child that Pays

A MOTHER whose training in hygiene has evidently been neglected, asks whether she should "submit" to having her daughter vaccinated a third time. She says the child was vaccinated twice in the first year in school, unsuccessfully, and now the child brings home a note informing the parents that a third attempt at vaccination is required.

Submit is not the right word. Cooperate would be better. There is no reasonable insurance in two unsuccessful attempts at vaccination, that the child is immune to smallpox. Not until the third attempt has been made, with virus known to be active, may this mother feel that she has done her duty. If the third attempt proves unsuccessful, then it is fair to assume that the child is naturally immune. At least, that is my opinion.

I believe in vaccination for everybody, as a fairly certain protection against the danger of smallpox. Of course we do not know the specific cause of variola (smallpox)—no germ or organism has been isolated; we do not know the specific cause of cowpox nor of vaccine (the disease inoculated by vaccination with cowpox virus), for no one has isolated the specific organism; we do not even know that cowpox is a form of smalpox modified by passing through the animal; but we know that people inoculated by vaccine are practically immune to variola. And so I believe in keeping myself and all who would have my advice about it well vaccinated.

At the same time I insist that it is an unjustifiable assault to compel anybody who does not desire it to be vaccinated. I go further and assert that the health or other authorities who have in the past or who even today uphold compulsory vaccination are incompetent and fanatical and unfit to administer public welfare. I think the parent who does not desire vaccination or who does not believe in it is a contemptible coward if he does not fight with the utmost vigor and such assault upon his child.

If vaccination is as efficacious as the health authorities think it is, then it should suffice to offer it free of cost to all citizens who desire the protection, and to warn the public that the state cannot be responsible for what may happen to those who fail to avail themselves of this protection. We who are successfully vaccinated have nothing to fear from an outbreak of smallpox; let those who are not vaccinated worry about that.

Persons who are well vaccinated need not be embarrassed or restrained in any way in the event of an outbreak or epidemic of smallpox. Persons who are not vaccinated cannot fairly complain of any restrictions upon their liberty or their intercourse with the people at large, which the health authorities may deem necessary for public safety. But if the principle or policy I just suggested were adopted in public health administration no such restriction of liberty would be required in any event. It is still necessary, in the judgment of the public health authorities, because so many children remain unprotected through the negligence of their parents. It would be scarcely fair to admit an unvaccinated child to school where other unvaccinated children may be present. —but if all the children in school were well vaccinated of course there would be no danger of smallpox outbreaks among the children.

MY ADVICE to parents is that they should see to it that every child is properly vaccinated before the end of the first year. Of course vaccination is not in itself absolutely free from any risk, but the wise parent willingly takes the trifling risk for the great comfort of knowing that the child is protected against an infinitely greater danger.

It might be argued that if a parent makes affidavit that he has a conscientious objection to vaccination, the school authorities ought to accept the affidavit in lieu of evidence of vaccination, and admit such a conscientious objector's child to school. This at once raises the question whether a parent should have a right to withhold vaccination from his own child. The state assumes that a parent is bound to furnish proper medical care for a sick child and holds to strict accountability the parent who fails to provide such medical care. But I believe some exception is made when the parent swears to a conscientious objection to medical treatment and claims the right to rely wholly upon prayer or imagination, let us say. Similarly the state might excuse parents who have queer scruples tough on the kids, at least it seems so to me, just as I feel pity for the child sacrificed to diphtheria or appendicitis or other curable disease when the parent refuses to have medical care and stakes the child's life on the prayers or the uplifting thoughts of some nice old lady practitioner of a freak healing cult.

Few readers will accuse me of rating popular intelligence too high, yet I think our people are too enlightened for compulsory vaccination or any other compulsory medical treatment today. Maybe this is a question of the survival of the fittest. Anyhow, I believe the health authorities at present should say: "Here's free vaccination. We believe it will protect you against smallpox. The state prepares and furnishes the virus. Take it or leave it. We won't kiss you if you take it. We won't kick you if you leave it. After all, you, the free people, you are the state, and we, the health authorities, are only your civil servants. It is our province to advise you to do thus and so for protection of health, never to compel or command."

She Went and Blabbed.

May an old, but very happy, woman tell you something of what she owes to Dr. Brady? You won't remember, of course, but I wrote a rambling letter telling you what was on my mind, and you sent me a golden answer. . . . we've both been reassured by it . . . only hope our two daughters and three sons will have the privilege of asking Dr. Brady when they need a good friend's counsel . . . (Mrs. B. C. C.)

Answer.—That's the trouble with this job—can't tell a woman a thing without the risk that she'll go and blab it to her husband.

Harmless Garments.

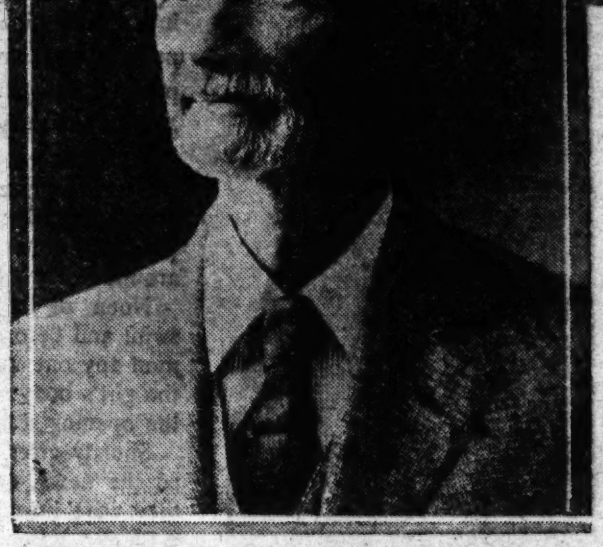

Are rubber corsets, I mean the kind entirely covered with jersey cloth, injurious? I am rather stout, and while I haven't much faith in their ability to reduce, I feel smaller in one, and it is not uncomfortable. I do not perspire much in it, but is one liable to catch cold or suffer in any way from it? How can I reduce hips and abdomen? (Mrs. H. D. M.)

Answer.—Aside from minor skin troubles due to the irritation from retained sweat, rubber garments do no harm. Of course pressure, gentle or

United Nation Forgetting Enmities

Such is the spirit of fairness and love toward the South shown by Gamaliel Bradford, northern historian (shown above), that his volumes and portrait were features in a Memorial Day window display in Macon.

LAST vestiges of enmity between the former soldiers of the north and of the south who were bitter foes on the battlefields in 1861-65 have long since disappeared and an era of cordial friendship between the surviving soldiers on both sides has supplanted former bitterness, in the opinion of Oliver Orr, of Macon, long identified with the Confederate cause. Mr. Orr points to two significant incidents to show the development of the new friendship between the former enemies.

Mr. Orr calls attention to the tablet unveiled at Oak Bluffs, Mass., by Harry Clay Wade Post No. 201, Grand Army of the Republic, in honor of the Confederate veterans. At the same time he calls attention to the work of Gamaliel Bradford, of Wellesley Hills, Mass., a northern historian whose works were recently displayed in a Memorial window at Macon dedicated to the heroes of the South.

Among the historical volumes written by Mr. Bradford are "Lee, the American," "Confederate Portraits," and "American Portraits," the last containing a sketch of Sidney Lanier, southern poet.

In his article Mr. Orr gives a brief sketch of the work of the northern historian who has praised the achievements of southern military leaders and statesmen and describes the Memorial window displayed recently at Macon.

THE closing of the chasm between the North and the South," writes Mr. Orr, "seems to be a reality, and again we have a united country, from the extreme north to way down south in Dixie, and all this is brought about by spirits of brotherly love one for another.

"We find at Oak Bluffs, Mass., a tablet erected by the Henry Clay Wade Post No. 201, G. A. R., in honor of the Confederate veterans. This tablet was unveiled with appropriate exercises, in memory of our Southland heroes. And down in the city of Macon, Georgia, on April 26, 1925, we find a remarkable event that has no equal in the ages of the past. A Memorial window, decorated with Confederate generals and heroes, has in the center a Yankee historian, Gamaliel Bradford, of Wellesley Hills, Mass., his photograph being the focus of attraction, and surrounding him Confederates' photographs whom this gifted Yankee has spoken of in such a glorious manner, and surrounding all the works he has penned, 'Lee, the American,' 'Confederate Portraits' and 'American Portraits,' the last containing a sketch of Sidney Lanier. All of these were resting in peace and security on the Confederate flag.

THE 'Memorial Window' caused so much comment that it remained on exhibition for several days. The usual Memorial Day celebration at Rose Hill cemetery, where our Confederate dead sleep, was a beautiful occasion this year. The speaker at the exercise spoke of a reunited country, and as was customary, salutes were fired over the Confederate dead, each grave having a flag, and the bugler sounded taps. Then came the march back from the cemetery to the decorated Confederate monument. The military companies fired their salutes as usual, and closing the ceremonies, the local military companies marched by with the old Confederate veterans. The veterans passed in file and saluted the great Massachusetts historian for his labor in faithfully recording the deeds of the South's heroes. Never have I witnessed such joy and tears as on this occasion. While United States flags were out in front of all the stores, showing loyalty to the Union, yet the past was not forgotten, as demonstrated by the evidence of this wonderful never-to-be-forgotten Memorial window.

MAY I not record what Washington and Lee university thinks of Gamaliel Bradford. It was of this university that Robert E. Lee became president when he determined to do something for the young men of the South after the Civil war.

"I wrote to the president, Henry Louis Smith, and asked him what he thought of Bradford. I quote from his letter before me, 'I write, therefore, to say that all of us here are thoroughly acquainted with his work, his books, and his close relationship with General Lee's institution. Washington and Lee some years ago conferred upon him an honorary degree, and I have personally distributed forty or fifty copies of his matchless book, 'Lee, the American,' from my own office.'

"Bradford, in his correspondence with me, stated that no race could surpass the South. He spoke in the highest terms of Robert E. Lee and Sidney Lanier, of what they accomplished and told what ideal men they were.

"Bradford, born in the north, has never been south, and has no relatives in the south. He is doing all that a loving heart, soul and mind can do for a people whom he loves beyond description.

"I cannot but help and feel that the seed sown by that great Southerner, Henry Grady, in his speech in Massachusetts has brought forth a great harvest, and with willing and loving hearts, those at Oak Bluffs, Massachusetts, and Macon, Georgia, have been taught to feel that love in the hearts of all in this great country will cause a reunited country, and I want to place before the readers of your superb paper, this photograph so that all can see that the 'Closing of the Chasm' is at hand."

"A MINOR HERO"

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

THIS POPULAR AUTHOR IS AT HIS BEST IN "A MINOR HERO." THE STORY DEALS WITH A TROUBLESOME AFFAIR THAT IS BROUGHT TO A SENSIBLE AND PROPER END. :: :: ::

Her Dreadful Two Days' Fli

In Virginia Goi, her friends declared, the famous beauty of Italy's young womanhood reached perfection

TRIED SUICIDE BECAUSE SHE COULDN'T HAVE THE MAN SHE LOVED, SAVED FROM A HORRID DEATH BY HER SWEETHEART, AND NOW THEY'LL BE MARRIED — THE ASTONISHING EXPERIENCE OF AN ITALIAN BEAUTY

MILAN.

JUST before dawn not many days ago a night watchman, sitting in front of a factory on the bank of the canal that follows the bed of the ancient moat around Milan, saw a young woman hurrying past. She stirred his interest because she was so beautiful and so well dressed and also because it was so unusual to see any woman in that locality at that hour.

As his eyes followed her she turned off the roadway to a bridge that spans the canal a few rods beyond the factory. It is known in the neighborhood as the Sirens' Bridge.

Near the middle of the bridge she stopped, as if uncertain whether she was on the right road. Then with a lightning-like movement, she leaped up on the low parapet, raised her hands for a second in a gesture of prayer and—plunged into the canal, whose waters at this point flow with quite a strong current.

The horrified watchman seized a rope and ran to the girl as the water carried her past him but, although it fell within reach of her hands, she made no effort to grasp it.

Nearly half a mile farther down the canal laborers going to their day's work saw the girl and they, too, attempted her rescue by throwing ropes and pieces of lumber into the water. This time she made a desperate effort to save herself, but now it was too late

1—Raising her hands in a gesture of prayer Virginia Goi leaps from the parapet of the Sirens' Brdige into the Milan canal

2—All attempts to rescue the girl fail and the strong current carries her into a pipe leading to one of Milan's great sewers, an arched conduit two miles long —her strength was too far gone.

Just beyond this point some of the canal's water flows into a drain pipe connecting with an important part of Milan's sewer system —an arched conduit six feet high which extends for about two miles and finally empties itself into the marshy tracts around Porta Vittoria.

None of the workmen could swim and before they could summon any one who could they saw the girl's body swiftly sucked into the opening leading to the sewer.

Shortly after the police received the news of the occurrence they were listening to the plea of a Signor Meyer to find a young woman relative of his wife's named Virginia Goi. She had mysteriously disappeared that morning, the signor explained, while every one else in the house was asleep. And in her room she had left a little note of farewell in which she said she was going to drown herself.

It was a touching story Signor Meyer had to tell of Virginia Goi's reasons for suicide. She was, he said, the daughter of a prosperous middle-class family living in a village only a few miles from Milan. Almost from her cradle she had been famed for her comeliness, and when she grew up her friends proudly declared that in Virginia Goi the beauty of Italy's young womanhood reached perfection.

BUT, as often happens with beautiful girls, she was not as happy as she was good-looking. She wanted to marry her childhood sweetheart, Salvatore Guida, a young man of about her own age. Her parents, however, had arranged a marriage for her with the village storekeeper, a widower, old enough to be Virginia's father. They preferred him for a son-in-law, because he was rich, while Salvatore Guida's fortune was still to be made.

Virginia was so broken-hearted over the prospect of having to give up the man she loved that her parents sent her for a long visit to the Meyer family. They hoped that a few weeks of the excitement of city life would make her forget her shattered romance, but the gayety of Milan could not cure what ailed the girl. She continued to brood and grow pale and thin and look and feel more and more miserable.

As the police quickly saw, Virginia Goi was undoubtedly the girl who had leaped from the Sirens' bridge and they inserted her name in place of the words "name unknown" in their records.

"Can nothing be done to save her?" asked the agitated Signor Meyer. "Isn't it possible that she may be still alive down in that dreadful place?"

"Oh, no!" the chief of police replied. "She must have died long before this. Probably she was drowned before she reached the great conduit. If not, she could not have long survived the poisonous gases that arise from the fowl water flowing two or three feet deep through the sewer. It is useless to look for her, my dear signor, she is dead."

3—Forty-eight hours after leaping into the canal Virginia's devoted sweetheart, peering through a manhole not far from the sewer's outlet, discovers her—still alive, but in a pitiable condition from exposure, hunger and terror of the water rats, frogs and other repugnant creatures that swarm about her

NEITHER was there any hope of recovering the girl's body, the chief If it had lodged in the conduit, it would quickly disintegrate. If it had been carried to the sewer's outlet in the marshes—why, it was hopeless to look for it in that morass.

Soon after Signor Meyer left police headquarters, sadly disappointed, a very frantic young man came rushing in with breathless inquiries about Virginia Goi. This was her sweet heart, Salvatore Guida.

The night before, she had sent him a letter telling him of her plan to kill herself. When it reached him early that morning, he had hired an automobile and speeded to Milan in the hope of arriving in time to prevent her suicide.

Unlike Signor Meyer, Salvatore Guida could not be convinced that Virginia was dead. He insisted that the sewer be searched from one end to the other for his sweetheart, and his arguments and pleas made such an impression on the police that at last they consented.

Searchers, clad in rubber coats and hip boots, were sent into the conduit. They traversed sections of it where no man had been since it was built. Other searching parties worked on the ground above, opening one man-hole after another, and flashing lanterns and searchlights down into the dark and ill-smelling interior for some sign of the vanished girl.

The men who went into the sewer found the task of searching it a tremendously difficult one. The force of the current and the slipperiness of the slime-coated floor made it hard to keep their footing. And when they slipped and fell headlong as they often did some of the legions of rats leaped on them and menaced their flesh with sharp teeth and claws.

Their progress was a slow and painful one. The poisoned air was so suffocating that at frequent intervals they had to climb up through a manhole for a breathing spell.

Salvatore Guida joined in and directed the search. In fact, he was its animating force, refusing to stop for food or sleep, and continually urging his fellow searchers to more strenuous efforts.

All that day they searched, all that night, all the next day and the following night. Early on the third morning, almost forty-eight hours after the girl had been seen to leap from the bridge, Salvatore Guida peered through a manhole and saw—Virginia Goi, still alive, although in a pitiable condition from exposure, hunger and her terror of the water rats, frogs and other repugnant creatures that leaped, crawled and scampered about this strange visitor to their home.

THE girl sat huddled on a step-like piece of masonry that arises above the bottom of the conduit. Her feet were swept by the stream of water that flowed to a depth of nearly three feet.

Salvatore Guida shouted her name, and she responded with a low cry. Overjoyed at this assurance of her life, he called other men to his aid and together they climbed down into the sewer and carried Virginia to a place where she could be hoisted to the open air with ropes. During the ascent, she lost consciousness, but she was soon revived and hurried to the house from which she had fled two days before.

The police, the officials of the sew... age system, and the physicians ... tended Virginia, were amaze... human being could have ... rible two-mile unde... without being drown... unrecognizable pulp...

But Virginia Goi, ... shock to her nervous sy... uninjured; even her cl... been torn from her as ... thought they would have been, by ... force of the water and her rough contact with the sides of the conduit.

Physicians think that the girl must have lost consciousness soon after she disappeared from the watching laborers' view, and knew nothing about her horrible two-mile journey. A fortunate swirling of the current threw her body up on the ledge where she was discovered.

If she had been carried a few hundred yards farther, she would have reached the swamp into which the sewer empties. From there, it is barely possible that a strong man could make his escape, but it is doubtful if a girl in Virginia Goi's weakened condition could do so.

Within a few days, Virginia was able to be taken back to her village home, and on her arrival there came the romantic climax of this amazing true story.

Her parents, overjoyed at the way their daughter had been snatched from death by her lover's devotion and persistence, withdrew their objections to the marriage. The wedding will take place early this winter.

A BLUE RIBBON SHORT STORY.

ises, Jacques motioned me to follow him into M. Joliot's study.

"What do you think of the governess?"

"Decision reserved. She's hard as —Flemish oak."

"Well, they've precipitated the nutgall in her with their questions. Have you formed any theory?"

"No. Beyond thinking that it's an inside job."

"Why?"

"Because the dogs were with the boy. Even a good-natured old spaniel and a fat Basset could raise a rumpus if the boy had been grabbed by force, or even handled, and somebody would have to lift him over the wall."

"Why, yes," Jacques admitted, "if he were in the garden."

"Miss Grigsby said she went out with him into the garden, then came back into the house."

"I believe her," Jacques said. "Maybe she lifted him over the wall."

"Maybe," I answered, and added dryly in my turn: "That's what you'd better get her mind to tell you. Too bad we haven't got a bloodhound."

"Well," said Jacques. "Bloodhounds are out of my line. But, now that I'm here, I've got to do something, I suppose. Examine everybody's head in turn, so as to cause no ill feeling. Just as dinner guests volunteer to let their pockets be turned out in these stories you read where a big jewel disappears at a dinner party."

"That's not a bad idea," I said, and added sarcastically: "Start with the distracted mother and work down."

"Precisely what I'd thought of," Jacques said calmly. "But I'll go it one better by starting with Madame Marquand and work down. She was ... first to bring the affair to my ..."

"...t that going to scramble your ...little?"

"...ains scarcely enter into ...'s psychological reflex."

"...uand joined us at this ...

"... seized anything?" she ...

"...friend," said Jacques. "I ...you already that I am no ... in the usual sense; all that I ... do is to read the mind of the person or persons involved and pronounce upon the guilt or innocence of that one, so that if I am to be of any service in the present case I shall have to do one of two things—either wait for the police to confront me with this suspect or else examine the minds of everybody who has any connection with the case at all."

Madame Marquand was quick to seize the idea. "Do it, then," she said, "and begin with this hateful Mees."

"No," said Jacques, though I thought I caught a gleam of malice in his soft brown eyes. "The rules of precedence must obtain in criminal as in social procedure. Besides, I do not care to arouse anger and resentment. I propose, therefore, to take you all in order."

Madame Marquand stared.

"Moi? But why do you want to examine me?" she exclaimed with a nervous little laugh.

"To pave the way," said Jacques. "To put the onus on any one who might see fit to decline. I will therefore examine in the 'order of their appearance,' as the theatrical program says. First you, then Madame Joliot, Miss Grigsby, the gardener, the butler, maids, down to the aide de cuisine, if they've got a kitchen helper.

"But that is absurd," cried Madame Marquand. "Why wish to examine me, who was at Le Touquet all the time."

"Because," said Jacques mildly, "your mind might tell me something that has some bearing on the domestic life of this estimable family."

This time there was no mistaking the flash of fear on the face of this pretty mondaine lady.

"But what do I know about that?" she demanded.

"That," said Jacques, "remains to be seen."

"But you are ridiculous. A woman does not care to bare her mind for scrutiny to a man, any more than she would wish to bare her body. In fact, I am not sure that I would not prefer the latter."

"No doubt Miss Grigsby may feel the same way about it," Jacques said, "but I will promise to look at no more than might appear to have a bearing on the disappearance of the little boy."

She did not seem reassured. I suppressed a smile at her evident regret at having dragged Jacques into the case at all. But she answered with spirit. "Then you would see nothing. It would be a waste of time, and not altogether dignified."

Jacques shrugged. "Of course, if you decline, madame——"

"But I have not declined. I say merely that it is absurd. If we compromise——. I will tell you all that I know about the family relations without putting you to the trouble of reading my mind." She looked rather pointedly at me.

"Then you may tell it to us both," said Jacques. "M. Clarke is a journalist, but he is also a man of honor and discreet."

Madame Marquand had to be content with this. She glanced about a little furtively, made sure there was no danger of our being overheard, then spoke rapidly in a low voice.

"Julie and her husband are not happy. He deceives her. She has the proof, and so also has her father, M. de Gunzville. There has been a scene between him and Joliot. I fear it has gone rather far, and that a divorce is even now impending. Joliot is manager of the London branch, and I do not think for some time his conduct of it has been any more to M. de Gunzville's satisfaction than has Joliot's treatment of his wife. There is going to be a rupture."

She paused. Jacques nodded wearily.

"Proceed, if you please, madame."

"Joliot spends most of his time in London. Juliet desired to live here in the chateau to make it easier for him to run over for the week-ends, but now she regrets having done so. She regrets also having employed the English governess who was secured in London by Joliot. He was here last week, and, although she had no evidence, Julie became suspicious that her husband was carrying his bad behavior into his home. And that is all I can tell you, M. Hughes, because it is all I have been told myself."

SHE had literally quoted Jacques at the conclusion of one of his seances. He nodded, then rose, took a pace or two, and asked: "Is Joliot fond of his little boy?"

"He adores him," said Madame Marquand. "That has been for Julie his redeeming feature. But now I am not so sure."

"Eh, bien, madame," said Jacques listlessly, "then you can be sure of one thing at least. It is Joliot who has kidnaped his son."

Madame Marquand nodded. She looked then at Jacques with a sudden burning interest.

"I should say, monsieur, that it was not necessary for you to read a person's mind."

Jacques raised his eyebrows. "At least, madame, I must protest at being called upon to do so to pay off a feminine grudge."

"What do you wish to say, monsieur?"

"I do not need to say it," Jacques' pleasant voice became suddenly austere. "You know quite well what I mean. You brought me here not to solve the mystery of the disappearance of this little boy in the hope that I would read the mind of this English governess and so inculpate her in the kidnaping of her charge. Possibly without my discovering actually that Miss Grigsby was in collusion with the boy's father, although that would not greatly matter.

"I do not know, madame, precisely what the legal aspect toward Joliot would be under the circumstances, whether in France or in England. It is very complicated. But I would say that, as he is not yet divorced, he would be entitled to the custody of his child until such divorce be granted his wife. It seems to me also that at this moment if he has managed to get the boy to England it would be extremely difficult for Madame Joliot to have her son extradited and returned to her."

"Then do you believe, monsieur, that Joliot has got back to England with the boy?"

"I do. It is a fine day for a channel crossing and the coast of England —Hastings, for instance—about fifty English statute miles from Etaples. An ordinary power boat could make the crossing in five hours. So, since the little boy disappeared at eight this morning, it is safe to say that he has probably by this time arrived on English soil, in which case it will take a good deal of legal machinery to fetch him back again. His custody by his father will also give Joliot a very strong grip on M. de Gunzville."

Madame Marquand pondered this for a moment. "And this governess?" she asked.

"Miss Grigsby was, of course, a party to the abduction, though it may be impossible to prove it against her. Though, whatever part she played in it, here in French soil, would leave her immune from legal procedure, since she was acting under the order of Joliot, who was the one to employ her. The law cannot touch her."

Jacques reflected for a moment, then asked: "Have the police reported any foreign yachts or launches at Boulogne?"

"Not to my knowledge, monsieur. But at this season there are apt to be some there."

"Well," said Jacques, "I should say that one had probably put out at about eight-thirty this morning. And I think you can assure Madame Joliot that her little boy is in no danger whatever of any harm. 'Safe in his father's house.' His English house."

Madame Marquand looked at him intently. She said then with slow distinctness: "I believe, Monsieur Hughes, that you are a fraud. I have thought so for some time. I had an argument about you with Julie, who claimed that you were really a highly gifted clairvoyant. Of course at the moment I had not anticipated anything of this sort. But it is very clear to me now that your pretensions as a mind reader are—blague!"

"Really, madame?" Jacques looked at her intently, and it seemed to me that she met his gaze with a sudden eagerness. "Then in that case you cannot object, you will not be afraid,

POEMS OF THE CONFEDERACY

POEM NO. 9

CARRIE BELL SINCLAIR

Carrie Bell Sinclair, daughter of a Methodist minister, was born in Georgia in 1839. Her first volume of poems was published in 1860. In 1872 a second volume appeared. Following the war, she made her home in Philadelphia.

GEORGIA, MY GEORGIA.

Hark! 'Tis the cannon's deafening roar
That sounds along the sunny shore,
And thou shalt be in chains no more,
My wounded, bleeding Georgia!
Then arm each youth and patriot sire,
Light up the patriotic fire,
And bid the zeal of those ne'er tire
Who strike for thee, my Georgia!

On thee is laid Oppression's had,
Around thy altars foemen stand
To scatter Freedom's gallant band
And lay thee low, my Georgia!
But thou hast noble sons, and brave,
The Stars and Bars above thee wave,
And here we'll make Oppression's grave
Upon the soil of Georgia!

We bow at Liberty's fair shrine,
And kneel in holy love at thine,
And while above our stars still shine,
We'll strike for them and Georgia!
Thy woods with victory shall resound,
Thy brow shall be with laurels crowned
And Peace shall spread her wings around
My own, my sunny Georgia!

Yes, these shall teach thy foes to feel
That Southern hearts and Southern steel
Will make them in submission kneel
Before the sons of Georgia!
And thou shalt see thy daughters, too,
With pride and patriotism true,
Arise with strength to dare and do
Ere they shall conquer Georgia!

Thy name shall be a name of pride—
Thy heroes all have nobly died,
That thou mayst be the spotless bride
Of Liberty, my Georgia!
Then wave thy sword and banner high,
And louder raise the battle cry,
Till shout of vict'ry reach the sky
And thou art free, my Georgia!

"You are avoiding me," he went on with direct accusation, cleverly trying to put her on the defensive, therefore in the wrong.

ALTOGETHER, she looked charming, and O'Malley would have told her so, had he been willing to let his obstinate, bitter, self-hurting prejudice against women yield the palm to his emotion—and, too, had he known more about the female of the species than he did. For, the best way to break the psychological ice frosting of a woman's mind is by using a physiological hammer, by talking of outer, strictly personal, and intimate details—to say, for instance: "So sorry! I know I'm wretchedly ill bred. But, really, I must tell you—your hair is delightfully arranged!" or: "You have made the impossible possible, the incredible credible. Why—bless my soul—your frock actually succeeds in doing you justice!" or, slangily, less floridly, yet perhaps more impressively: "Gee! if Romeo had seen you first, [illegible]d have torn up Juliet's address!"

But O'Malley said nothing of the [illegible]rt.

In fact, being Irish he was busy crucifying himself; while Ellen, being American in all her social reactions, decided that it was his, the man's duty to banish whatever disagreeable preoccupations were torturing his soul and to entertain her. And, knowing that this was hardly fair, she held the more stubbornly to her resolve not to give in a single inch, even though it should make her more unhappy than he.

So conversation withered and [illegible]oped.

The real trouble was that each was [illegible]cked by a secret pain, cruciated by a secret, jealous bitterness which each was eager to blurt out, but could not.

On Ellen's lips were the unspoken words:

"So this gypsy girl knows you well enough to take a passionate interest in your welfare to implore Tcherkessky not to harm you? As a woman hater you're a fraud!"

On O'Malley's lips were the unspoken words:

"So you had tea with Tcherkessky although you know he is my enemy who tried to murder me this morning? How do I know? This silent Turk with the yellow beard over there in the corner told me. He is my servant. He's watching you, young lady. Not only for your sake, to protect you, as I intended first—but from now on also for my own sake. I was right, straight along! You can't trust a woman!"

Thus they fenced silently, with those mute thoughts of theirs until finally—by that not at all mysterious force called mental telepathy—they caught a vague drift of what was going on in each other's minds.

Both grew angry in consequence.

For they were young. They were passionate. They were lonely. They were unhappy. And they longed for each other.

A moody, dejected dinner and, after coffee and liquer, it was with indescribable relief to both that one of them—neither knew who—suggested a walk.

Out there Constantinople swarmed with the reek and riot of its night life, loud enough to give an excuse for not conversing. Still, while they did not talk, they felt that they were together, and this time their unspoken thoughts changed a little.

For Ellen said to herself:

"Well—that's all right, as far as it goes. At least, as long as he is with me, he isn't with that gypsy!"

And O'Malley said to himself:

"I can't claim that I'm enjoying this stroll. But, at least, as long as she is with me, she isn't with that cad of a Circassian!"

So they were both satisfied—in a way, and both dissatisfied—in a way.

They walked for perhaps half an hour, turning away from the Rue Tepe Bashi into a narrow tangle of shadowy, crowded alleys where half the picturesque though unwashed rogues of Islam seemed to dwell together in noisy rowdyism amiability. The life of the orient opened before Ellen's eyes like a pit filled with strange and motley things, highly spiced, highly scented and colored.

America, Spokane, home, seemed far away. Far away seemed the old life, the sane and safe life framed by codified laws, codified prejudices, codified respectability.

This, here, was romance, the scent and clank and glamour of it.

So, silently they walked.

Silently they returned.

"Thank you," she said as he bade her good-night.

"Dine with me tomorrow night?" he asked, trying to make his voice sound perfunctory.

Her reply was just as perfunctory: "I don't mind."

But, perfunctory or not, they dined together the next night, and the next, and again the next, until the gossip at the hotel switched into a different channel, substituting O'Malley's name for Tcherkessky's.

THROUGHOUT Pera and Galata drifted the gossip, gathering headway and pungent, racy details, at last reaching the house near the Dolma Bagtcheh palace where Bibi Fathma took her rage and jealousy by administering a severe beating to her husband.

"Curse the unclean head and belly of the father of you—father of seventeen unsavory piglings!" she cried, and she tore the rhinoceros hide whip from a black servant's wrist and applied it on Shafizullah's lean, cringing buttocks with her own fair but strong hands.

"Hai, hai, hai!" he yelled; and he added with a whisper: Towakkal al' Ullah—place your reliance upon God, O moon of my delight."

"I shall place my reliance upon your and Prince Tcherkessky's obedience, O goat of a fragrance most goatish," replied the gypsy. "Go to his house at once and order him to come here—immediately . . . "

"The prince, O rejoicer, is not one to be easily ordered . . . "

"Indeed?" She laughed. "If he refuses tell him I shall assuredly do—today—what I warned him I would! Tell him that the one human heart which he cannot hurt—hayah, hayah! —I shall stamp it beneath my heels—I shall spit on it—I shall pick it up again and scratch it with my nails and lacerate it with my teeth and tear it into a thousand bleeding shreds—unless he comes and obeys! Tell him! Go."

"Yes, soul of my soul," said Shafizullah, bending low to escape a final side swish of the kurbash and running from the house and toward the Rue de Pologne.

At the moment Tcherkessky was having troubles of his own. Closeted with Kibrizli Pasha, the Albanian adventurer who had been one of his seconds at the duel with O'Malley, he was laying down the law to him.

"You were drunk again last night," he announced.

"Who are you to give me a moral lecture?"

"Not a moral but a practical lecture. You were at the Shehzadi with that disreputable Syrian dancer."

"Therrya is doubtless disreputable. But what eyes! What lips! What . . ."

"What tongue!" Tcherkessky interrupted sardonically. "What leaking, babbling tongue! As leaking and babbling as your own tongue!"

Kibrizli Pasha scratched his bullet-shaped head.

"Did I—O—say anything to her?"

"Yes. Something about you and me being pleased by Watson Pasha's and Yar Ali Bey's death."

"We are, aren't we?" laughed the other.

"Doubtless. But your Syrian friend went straight to Sabri Bey and told him the glad news."

"Sabri Bey suspects us anyway. Where is the difference?"

"The difference is that, furthermore, in your champagne-and-absinthe haze you seem to have confided to your little Syrian pal that Hakki Yussef is our confidential messenger."

"O . . ." Kibrizli Pasha's chair creaked as he sat up suddenly, leaning forward.

"At least," continued the prince, "half an hour ago, they arrested Hakki Yussef on a trumped-up charge, and he is now at headquarters being cross-examined by Sabri Bey—and you know his charming methods."

"How" — stammered the other — "how do you know?"

"Because Djavid Bey, Sabri Bey's first assisttant, is my friend."

"Allah!" Kibrizli's ruddy face turned pale. "What are we going to do?"

"Two things. Here——" he took out a visiting card and scribbled a few words—"this will introduce you to Djavid Bey. Ask him to get you into touch, secretly and just as soon as humanly possible, with Hakki Yussef. Talk to the latter. Work on him hard. Promise him anything and everything if he will only keep his mouth shut. In the meantime, I shall call on Bibi Fathma and ask her to . . . "

And just then Shafizullah came with the gypsy's message. He salaamed to Kibrizli Pasha then whispered in Prince Tcherkessky's ear:

"Come at once! My wife wants you! She is mad, mad, mad! She barks like a jackal barking at the full moon! She has asked me to . . . O . . . ouch!" He rubbed his welted, crimson, aching back.

"Did she beat you again?" laughed Tcherkessky.

"Yes, effendi."

"How you must love her!"

"I do!" replied Shafizullah, naively and truthfully. "You will come?"

"Yes. In fact, I was just on the point of leaving the house to go to her."

Half an hour later the Circassian faced Bibi Fathma. She stared at him stonily. But Prince Tcherkessky spoke before she could:

"You can say your say afterwards. My own predicament is really more pressing than yours. Here—" he loosened his collar—"take a look at my neck."

"What is the matter with it?" asked the gypsy, astonished.

"If you look close you will observe there the red shadow of the hangman's noose;" and he related to her what he had told Kibrizli Pasha.

"I am glad of it," said Bibi Fathma, simply and succinctly. "I wish you would die!"

"Why, my adorable little wild cat?"

"Because you have broken your promise."

"What promise?"

"About the foreign woman."

"Let me explain."

"Shut up!" she shrieked. "You were going to make love to her—to be seen with her often, often—to oil gossiping tongues—to prepare the way for kidnaping! Ho!"

"Please," he begged, "do give me a chance to explain——"

"There is nothing to explain. Night after night the foreign woman is with O'Malley. And you . . . "

"I call on her frequently, Fathma, at least try to. But she absolutely refuses to see me. What can I do?"

"What you promised. Kidnap her."

"You told me yourself it must be done so that it appears she went voluntarily. Don't be so impatient. I to let me look into your mind for a moment?"

Madame Marquand laughed, but I noticed she averted her eyes.

"No. I do not say that you may not have a little power—a little, little bit. But about the boy. What really happened?"

"O, that now is merely guess work," Jacques said. "But I should say without blague, as you accuse me of, that Joliot came here early in the morning and hung around outside the wall until his little son toddled out to pick his flowers. Then he leaned over and beckoned him, lifted him over—the dogs, of course, making no objection—carried him to a car, took him down to the port, and, throwing a steamer rug about him, slipped him aboard his launch. That part of it would be easy enough. It is no great crime for a man to carry off his own son. Very likely your local gendarmerie knows all about it."

Madame Marquand looked at him and smiled. "At any rate," she said, "I have found you out, M. Jacques Hu-gez. You are not the mind reader you profess to be, but the very malin, astute master of deduction that you claim not to be. That is what I told Julie. And I told her also that you had no fear at all, and that you were not the supine person, nor the sort of dreamy mediumistic individual, that many claim."

Jacques rose and bowed. "Merci, madame—I appreciate your kindly esteem. But I would appreciate it even more if you had not felt it necessary to put it to the test. It is evident that you suspected all the time that it was Joliot who carried off his little boy, and that he did so through the connivance of Miss Grigsby."

MADAME MARQUAND smiled in the caline way of French mondaine women of her type.

"It required no test, mon ami, to know that you are a very astute reasoner who for some purpose best known to yourself, or perhaps merely through your artistic—or I may say dramatic—temperament, preferred to be accredited with a clairvoyant mind rather than one possessed of keen logic and a gift for analyzing human motives. But what I desired to be assured of was your courage, and if you could be frightened out of continuing your services in the suppression of crime——"

She checked herself suddenly, and with a shade of confusion. Jacques laughed.

"And so, to put me to the test, you sent that warning to me and to the police. It was considerate of you to send a copy to the police, thus leaving me a way out that might save my face. You reasoned that if I were to be frightened, I might listen to the advice of the police that I refrain hereafter from exposing myself to the risk of assassination."

Madame Marquand looked down at the handsome Aubuson carpet. Then she looked at Jacques, and it seemed to me there was rather more than admiration in her eyes.

"So you received a threatening letter, monsieur," she asked, with an attempt at innocence.

"I think I scarcely need answer that, madame. I didn't suspect its source; but, as you probably know, I immediately insisted that I be asked to examine a case in which there was no need for a mental interrogatory. Then I came to Le Touquet with M. Clarke to wait for what might happen."

"It is clear that you are not to be frightened," Madame Marquand murmured. "But do you not think, M. Hughes, that it was the act of a friend to try to keep you from a danger which must be real?"

"I shall not question the motive," Jacques answered, "but the means have subjected both M. Clarke and myself to considerable anxiety. It is not pleasant to feel that at any moment you may be the object of a murderous attack. Neither is it very safe. One might jump to a wrong conclusion, with disastrous results to some innocent person. Such practical jokes have been known to do an infinite amount of harm."

Madame Marquand did not answer. Jacques rose and bowed. For the first time in our association he impressed me as being very angry. If this meddling woman had thought to rouse his interest in this way, she had most signally failed.

"My compliments to Madame Joliot," Jacques said. "If you will be so kind, I shall request that you have your chauffeur drive us back immediately to Le Touquet."

Madame Marquand looked at me, and I could read in her eyes an appeal that I get out and let her make her peace with Jacques, if this were possible. Perhaps she didn't want a witness to any confession she might see fit to offer.

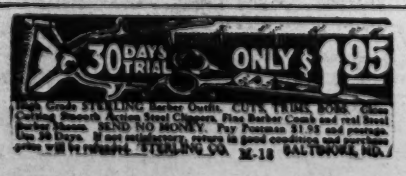

But Jacques took me by the arm. "Come on, Johnny," he said. "I don't think we can be of any further service here."

So out we went, the crestfallen lady following, telling her chauffeur, who was waiting in front of the perron, to take us back to Le Touquet, then to return for her. We bowed and rolled off. Then as we got out on the open road Jacques flung out his arms with a sigh of relief.

"Well that's that, Johnny. Hang all women. Now we can enjoy our golf."

county—Bartow—has TWENTY-THREE of them!"

The Detroit capitalist was as much impressed as he was astonished.

"That is perfectly wonderful," he said. "Why don't you publish these facts?"

"Because you wouldn't believe them!" retorted Mr. Reynolds, vigorously but good naturedly. "And yet if it were to come out on the front page of the Detroit paper that we were lynching a nigger every half hour in Georgia you'd believe that!"

At a banquet that night Detroit was referred to by several speakers as the outgrowin'est place in the world. When Mr. Reynolds was called upon for a speech he said:

"I can well believe that statement. I don't believe there's a city in the world growing fast as Detroit—it has even Atlanta beat in that respect. This morning I heard the population of your city referred to as one million. The Detroit paper this afternoon said you had one and a quarter million folks. And speakers tonight gave your population at one and a half million. Gentlemen, that's a gain of 500,000 population in just ONE DAY! I don't believe that such a remarkable record has ever been made before."

IN Chattahoochee county is the little community of Uno—formerly a postoffice. One day a resident of that community bought some goods in Columbus and asked that they be mailed to his address.

"What is the address?" asked the merchant, politely.

"Uno," he said.

"I know I SHOULD know, but I just can't call it to mind," the merchant said, diplomatically. "Here, I will take it down, to be sure. What is the place?"

"Uno," said the customer once more.

"But I most assuredly don't know!" said the store man, feeling riled a bit, and dangerously near losing his temper.

So then the customer kindly spelled it for him.

IN ATHENS, a few days ago, they fixed the budget of the chamber of commerce for the year at $13,500, and then committees went out to get the money. They sailed into the job so vigorously and so enthusiastically that they found it difficult to put on the brakes, the going was so good When they counted up the subscriptions they found that they aggregated $25,000, and so, just for good luck and to have a good, round sum, they made it $25,000. And now the committee will have to meet again and revise its budget—upward. A good portion of the money will be spent for advertising.

That is Athens' answer to the drouth!

IN MIDSUMMER—just three or four months ago—the Clinchfield Portland Cement Corporation began operation of its new Georgia plant, at Clinchfield in Houston county. It has already become necessary to enlarge that brand new plant!

Official announcement is made that a third unit at the Clinchfield plant will be built at once. This will include an additional rotary kiln 175 feet long and 10 feet in diameter, with necessary appurtenances. Work will begin at once and it is hoped to have this additional unit in operation by April 1, 1926, bringing the production of this plant up to one million barrels per year.

Lupine Lane made a skidding entry and with the aid of a hat, a cap and a beribboned wig impersonated three people, and finally killed his enemy, himself, and then won the girl.

"When men are men," by Earle Foxe and Robert Edeson, drew much applause with Creighton Hale a charming wife and Cyril Chadwick a slightly yellow husband spurred on by J. Farrel MacDonald to resist the rascally sheriff, Tom Mix, in a wonderful white satin shirt. The villain was slain, but Tom with a well directed kick brought him to life again.

Roy Atwell sang his famous song, "Some Little Bug Will Get You Some Day." Also Francis was the old mother thrown out in the snow storm by the rascally mortgage holder.

MARY PICKFORD'S opening at Grauman's Metropolitan drew a galaxy of stars. Mary herself was beautiful in a simple white satin dress and was almost overcome with emotion at her rousing reception. She called "Spec" O'Donnell, the "Abie" of the picture, to the stage with her and of course Doug was there with a little speech about realizing that after all this was one of the occasions when he was only Mr. Pickford and liked it. Charlie Chaplin ascended the stage with them, too, and made a brief and sincere tribute to "Little Mary."

Mary carried a crystal vanity case and wore a coral velvet cape with a silver lining. Elinor Glyn, Mary Philbin, Mr. and Mrs. Louis B. Mayer, Norma Shearer, Mary Brian, Mrs. Charles Chaplin, Hal Roach, Lon Anger, William Beaudine, Mary's director; Jack Gilbert, who received a great hand as he entered; Raymond Hatton and Charlie Murray were on hand with many others to honor Mary.

This was the first opening Mary has had here in some years and the crowds were so dense outside the theater that the Broadway of Los Angeles, on which the theater is, was roped off in the theater block and no traffic allowed to pass. Obviously Mary has "come back" for they surely like her here in "Little Annie Rooney."

firm, will not reduce. If moderate pressure would reduce, a lot of stout folks could have a grand time reducing where they need it most by just sitting around. In the long run the wearing of such contrivances tends to produce flabbiness and ungainliness, because it keeps the muscles from getting sufficient work, and after all, be it the skinny, perfect thirty-six or the stylish stout, it's muscles that makes a figure.

A Queer Business, Watson.

Our baby is tongue-tied and we have had so many different suggestions on what to do. The baby is four months old and the tongue does not bother him in nursing. What is the best thing to do? (Mrs. N. A.)

Answer.—The mystery is, how do you know the baby is tongue-tied if he has no difficulty about nursing? As a general rule, the fancy that a child is "tongue-tied" is a mistake. In the rare event of a frenum or cord under the tongue too short, this may be divided by the doctor.

Removal of Shameful Mutilation.

Is it possible to have a tattoo removed from the arm? Is there danger of poisoning? Where is a good place to have it done? (M. E. G.)

Answer.—Yes, a surgeon may remove it if the mutilation is not too large. There is the same chance of infection as in any other surgical procedure.

THE CANDY ROBBERY

BY DOROTHY DUNSING

"Don't you wish you had a piece of cocoanut taffy?" Patty called mockingly after her brother, whose dejected-looking figure was just disappearing around the corner of the house. "Don't you wish you—"

"You just wait!" he shrilled in reply.

Patty continued her task complacently, putting walnuts on the pieces of fudge and cutting the cocoanut taffy into long thin strips. It was for their Hallowe'en party that evening—the Club's and candy was to be her contribution to the refreshments. Then she got a big pink box and packed it all neatly away.

"I suppose we might have given Bill a piece or two; we have more than enough," began her mother, but Patty interrupted her.

"No sir! He can make his own candy; I want mine all for the club. He'll be there anyway and he can eat some then!"

So Bill had to wait.

Everything was ready and it was time to leave. Patty was all dressed in her demure Bo-Peep costume, and Bill wore an orange and black clown suit. "Why are you padding yourself, Bill?" asked Patty. "Do you want to be a fat clown?"

Patty tucked her box of candy under her arm and they started off to the neighbor's house in the next block, all tingling with excitement and eagerness over its being Hallowe'en. They had gone a short way when Bill stopped and peered intently at the shadows between two houses.

"I think I see something, Patty. I'm going to get it!"

"Don't leave me!" shrieked Patty, but it was too late; he was gone.

"OO-ee," she wailed. Then sneaking out from between the houses, just where Bill had vanished, came a white misty thing, wavering toward her over the lawn.

"EE—" shrieked Patty again, but her voice ended in a little tiny squeak that could scarcely be heard.

On came the white thing; Patty could see now that it was a ghost. She was too frightened to run, she just stood there. Now it was almost to her, and was speaking a low, death-like voice.

"Give to me what thou hast!"

The candy! The club's candy! She groaned as she handed it over. Very deliberately the ghost untied the string, tok out the top layer, and handed it back to her. She was astonished at such a procedure, but thankful to have some left. Then the ghost withdrew, walking backwards, rather hastily it seemed, as he got into the shadow, Patty hurried on to the neighbors, and in about fifteen minutes Bill appeared.

"A ghost chased me," he said unemotionally, patting the padding in his clown suit.

They enjoyed the party after that, and had an escort home. Patty told the story at the breakfast table with all the shrieks and lamentations that she had omitted at the time. Mother looked at father and father at Bill. He said nothing. Then mother looked at Patty.

"Do you remember being selfish when Bill wanted some of your candy?" she said. "I think, Patty, there must be a moral in this incident." And mother and father and Bill all laughed.

Some New Games Easy to Learn

Here is an outdoor game that is lots of fun to play on a fall day:

HAVE YOU SEEN MY SHEEP?

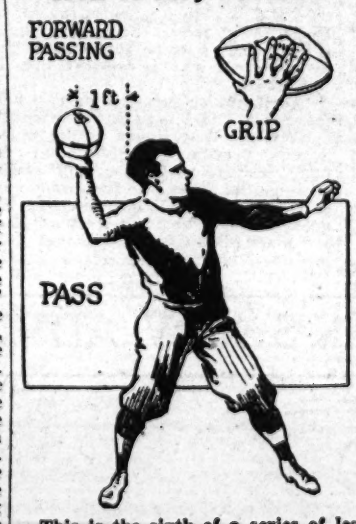

The players stand in a circle. One walks around the outside, and touching one of the circle players on the back, asks, "Have you seen my sheep?" The one questioned answers, "How was he dressed?" The outside player then describes the dress of some one in the circle, saying, for instance, "He wears a red necktie and a blue suit," or "He has a white dress and a blue band on his hair." The one questioned then names the player whom he thinks this describes, and if right, at once begins to chase him around the outside of the circle. Each of the circle players must be very alert to recognize himself in the description given by the outside player who guessed, and try to reach his own place before being tagged. Should the runner be tagged before returning to his place, he must take the part of the questioner, running in his turn, around the outside of the circle, and asking of some player, "Have you seen my sheep?"

And here is a game you can play indoors, in case it is too cold or rainy to be outside:

WHAT IS MY THOUGHT LIKE

Some person decides upon a "thought"—a person or object, without telling what it is. He then asks of each in turn, "What is my thought like?" Each one must answer something, or pay a forfeit. The answers may be absurd, such as, "Your thought is like an umbrella," "like Napoleon," and so on. When he has been around the circle, the questioner then tells of what he was thinking. He then says, supposing that his thought was of a mirror, "Why is a mirror like an umbrella?" Again, the persons who cannot answer must pay forfeits. The answers this time should be, "Because it is easily broken, or some real likeness. When these questions have been finished, forfeits are paid for and the game begins again.

How to Play Football

This is the sixth of a series of lessons which bring out the most important points which the boy should know who wants to learn to play football and play it right.

A good football player must know how to catch a ball correctly as well as kick it.

Keep Eye on Ball.

First of all, the catcher must keep his eye on the ball until he has it. If he takes a glance to watch for tacklers just before he catches, he is likely to fumble.

In getting ready for the ball the hands should be extended well up and out toward the ball, one a little farther than the other. The hand which is farthest out guides the ball to the body and is usually on top of the ball when it comes up against the player. The other hand helps to guide the ball into the pocket which is formed by the body and hands, and is on the underside of the ball.

Change Catching Style

When, however, the ball is very low or is over the head, it must be caught like a baseball.

Whenever the catch is not too difficult, it is best to make it on the run, as the catcher has a better chance to get away from the opposing tacklers.

(Next week: "Passing.")

What Words We Use Are Derived From

All our words of necessity are derived from the German; our words of luxury and those used at table, from the French. The sky, the earth, the elements, the names of animals, household goods, and articles of food, are the same in German as in English; the fashions of dress, and everything belonging to the kitchen, luxury and ornament, are taken from the French; and to such a degree of exactness, that the names of animals which serve for the ordinary food of men, such as ox, calf, sheep, when alive, are called the same in English as in German; but when they are served up for the table they change their names, and are callef beef veal and mutton after the French.

Most Wasps Drones And Do Not Sting

In this sunny month of September you will find lots of wasps clustered around the spikes of goldenrod. You need not be afraid of being stung, for most of them are drones, and have no sting. If you are careful always to pick out the white-faced ones, which are the drones, you can handle them safely. Turn them over in your palm and get a close look at what most persons are afraid to even watch.

THINGS TO MAKE

THE CAVERN WITH THE IRON DOOR

BY JACK GIHON

Author of "The Head Hunters of San Blas," Etc.

Steve Danford born and raised on a Texas prairie, is travelling horseback to El Paso, where he is to meet his uncle for a trip to the East, and decided to camp for the night at the foot of a mountain. There he falls into the hands of a band of Mexicans, mobilised for a revolution in Mexico, who think he is a spy. Later in the night he escaped them, and while riding along the mesa, comes upon a hut, where, looking through a window, Steve sees General Bandino, leader of the insurrectos, and another Mexican, laying plans to capture Juarez and loot a bank in which there is three million dollars in gold. Steve is discovered, and the two Mexicans chase him. Steve guides his horse into a deep arroyya in the hope of eluding his pursuers.

INSTALLMENT IV.

Down the steep side of the precipice boy and horse went. Despite the danger of the movement, Steve could not refrain from giving his horse an affectionate little slap on the neck, in admiration for the manner in which the animal was going down the slope. Sure of foot, never pausing, sometimes sliding and sometimes leaping, Baldy reached the bed of the arroya, and continued his swift gallop. Steve rode easily, lightly poised in the saddle, as Baldy raced along the uneven, hard ground.

He had lost sight of his pursuers, ever since he had gone over the embankment. Perhaps they were going on in another direction. Perhaps they had thought he had fallen, and were now climbing down into the arroyya, on foot, to search for him. At any rate, he heard no more of them, and the night was silent, save for the steady, soft pounding of Baldy's hoofs. It was nearly dawn, and even the mournfull-voiced coyotes had gone back to their sandy lairs.

Steve rode for half an hour before deciding to seek the top of the mesa again. The arroya twisted and turned, and the speed of his horse was offset by the bends; sometimes he was even going back in the direction from which he came.

Climbing to the top again, he dismounted, and peered over the edge carefully before stepping to the open tableland. The two Mexicans were nowhere in sight. And far in the distance he could see a red flare that was the melter in El Paso in operation.

Yet Steve was troubled by the adventures he had gone through during the night. On the face of things, the Mexicans camped at the mountain were merely patriots who sought a new government. In mobilizing on American soil, however, they were involving the government of the United States in their plans. Steve felt that the government officials should know something about this.

In addition, the conversation Steve had heard between the two Mexicans in the deserted hut, showed that their plans amounted to pain robbery. General Bandino's only interest in the planned attack was the loot he expected to take.

If the troop should be found on United States soil, however, that would be a different matter. At Fort Bliss were many soldiers of the United States army. Should they capture the men, before they crossed the river, they would automatically put a stop to the plan to capture Juarez. And here, Steve felt, was where he could be of service. His duty was to find the soldiers, to tell them of all that had happened during the night.

Dawn came suddenly, and there before him, just a few miles distant, Steve saw El Paso, a rangy city, spread out down a gentle hill, to the edge of the Rio Grande. Across the river he could see Juarez, the gleaming white of the church, the squat buildings packed close together.

His horse was tired, but in his eagerness to get there, he spurred Baldy on to even a swifter pace. Then, not a quarter of a mile away, he saw a line of mounted soldiers.

Nor were they Mexicans, for their uniforms were almost the color of the sand they rode across, and at their head gallantly waved a symbol that made Steve want to shout with joy. The American flag! Up to this moment, Steve had never understood how much that striped cloth could mean. To him, now, it meant, not only his own safety, but the safety of that little city across the river, and the capture of Bandino and his men.

Steve swerved his course so that he would come directly in their path, and waving frantically, dashed toward them. To stop a troop of cavalry is no easy task, and for a moment, Steve thought they were going to pass by without heeding him. But there was something in his attitude that caught the attention of the officer in charge, and when the troop, still a hundred yards away, had swung past, almost to the last man, Steve heard the clear note of a bugle, and the line came to a stop.

Steve galloped to the head of the procession; a captain was in command, who listened in a kindly manner to what the boy had to say. Breathlessly, Steve poured out his story.

"We've got about a hundred and sixty in the troop," the captain mused, "but I guess we can take care of them. All right, son," he finished, wheeling his horse, "you report to Fort Bliss, and tell the commandant what's happened. I'll send a trooper along with you."

"But can't I go back with you?" Steve asked. "I could show you the way."

"Sorry, son. It's against regulations. You've done enough, anyway—and the army's much obliged to you." Then he turned to a trooper in the ranks.

"Private Morse," he said, "report with this boy to the commandant at Fort Bliss. The boy will tell his own story. You will tell the commandant that Captain Connor, feeling that no time should be lost, has gone to apprehend the outlaws."

There was a note on the bugle. The troop stood at attention. Another note, and they had cantered off.

Steve sighed happily. Then he and Private Morse started for Fort Bliss.

They still talk of Steve Danford's part in apprehending the outlaws who had mobilized back of El Paso. The army took little credit for it. Captain Connor's troop came upon them, but the Mexicans were little inclined to fight. The sight of the uniform of the United States quickly cowed them. Bandino attempted to escape, but his horse, running at full speed, stepped into a gopher hole and broke his leg. The Mexican was thrown, but was not injured, except for a few bruises.

Disarmed the entire band was led back to the military prison.

"You're a real Danford, boy," Steve's uncle said, after the boy had told him the story of his journey from the ranch. "I'm proud of you."

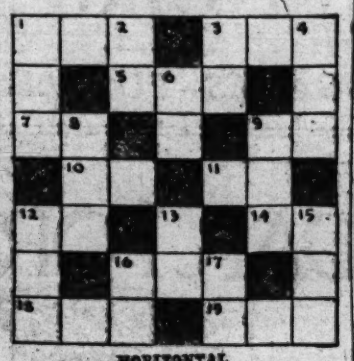

"But Uncle Dave," Steve protested, "I didn't do anything, except try to get away from them, once they'd caught me. I came upon them just by accident, and I escaped just by luck."

"Well, you've earned your trip with me, Steve, and I hope you'll enjoy it."

"Will I! Why, I can hardly wait." So that very night, Steve put his pony, Baldy, in a boarding stable, with special directions for taking care of the animal until he returned. And an hour later, the train for New York had among its passengers David Danford, and his nephew, Steve.

Mrs. Slig drowsed in front of the fireplace. Mr. Slig sat asleep in his favorite chair. He snored all over his shirt front—he was in evening clothes, having spent the night at the annual banquet of the Brotherhood of Opossums.

It began to rain softly, and the gentle patter on the roof soon sent Mrs. Slig to sleep. Presently she dreamed she was trying to fill a cup with tea. The cup had no bottom, and she thought it was running through on her best dress. She awoke with a start. Her knee felt wet, and she saw the roof was leaking. The rain was falling in her lap.

She caught up the poker and tapped Mr. Slig on the shins. He stopped snoring. She poked him in the ribs, and he giggled.

"Slig," she said, pointing towards her wet knees, "the roof leaks and I'm getting all wet!"

"You'd better move," suggested Mr. Slig, sleepily.

"You'd better move yourself and get something to catch the rain that falls through that leak," snapped Mrs. Slig.

"Why catch it?" asked Mr. Slig in astonishment. "We don't need rain."

"Well, if we don't catch it in somethin' it will be runnin' around all over the house," growled Mrs. Slig.

"Well, it won't hurt anything. It can run around with the children," remarked Mr. Slig.

"We can put on rubber boots, can't we?" snapped Mr. Slig, who was getting out of temper with his wife's nagging. "If you're so anxious to catch this rain, why in the name of salted herring don't you put a bucket under the leak?"

Mrs. Slig fished out an old bucket from under a bench and put it under the leak. Presently she noticed that the bucket leaked and the water was running out on to the floor.

The rain was falling in her lap.

"Now, what are we goin' to do, Slig?" she asked in despair. "The bucket leaks."

"You'd better set the bucket in a wash tub," suggested Mr. Slig.

Mrs. Slig lifted one of the children out of the wash tub, where he had fallen asleep, and ragged it under the leak. She set the bucket in the tub and flopped into a chair.

"Goodness!" she panted. "I haven't had so much worry since the children had the seven year itch."

It rained all morning, and, little by little, Mrs. Slig watched the water rise in the tub. By noon it was nearly full, and Mrs. Slig grew quite nervous.

"I don't know what we'll do when that tub overflows," she said to herself. "It'll be just as comfortable outdoors as it will be to stay here."

When the water had risen until it was only an inch from the top of the tub Mrs. Slig decided to awaken Mr. Slig, who had fallen asleep again.

"Slig," she said when she had fully awakened her husband, "something must be done quickly or this tub will be overflowing on the floor."

Mr. Slig lit his pipe and studied the tub for some time. He puffed out great clouds of smoke and thought deeply.

"I have it!" he exclaimed. "We can all take a drink out of the tub. That will keep it from overflowin' for a while, and in the meantime I will try to think up some other plan."

"I don't like the idea of drinking out of the wash tub," said Mrs. Slig. "The water will taste soapy."

"We might raise the tub up on some bricks and build a fire under it," suggested Mr. Slig. "That ought to boil the water away faster than it could drip into the tub."

"That would fill the house with steam," answered Mrs. Slig, "and steam would make all the wallpaper fall off."

"Couldn't the children hold the paper on the wall?" replied Mr. Slig.

"That's not at all practical," said Mrs. Slig. "The three children could hold the paper only on three of the walls. One of us would have to hold it on the ceiling while the other watched the fourth wall. There would be no one left to keep the fire up under the tub."

"I've got it! I've got!" shouted Mr. Slig. He had been thinking deeply while Mrs. Slig had been talking. "We can send for the plumber and have the water piped from the tub outdoors."

"Of course, Mr. Slig," smiled his wife. "You are certainly clever. Isn't it strange we never thought of that?"

Mr. Slig awoke Varment, one of the Slig children and sent him off to fetch Billy Skittels.

"Tell him to bring along about twenty feet of one inch pipe," cried Mr. Slig, pushing the child out of the door. "Tell him to hurry or the tub will overflow."

"We can have the pipe laid right out over the window," said Mrs. Slig.

"It can be painted a pretty green and it will add to the general appearance of the room."

"I think it ought to be painted blue to match the window curtains," argued Mr. Slig.

Mrs. Slig stuck out for green, so they argued for some time, but finally they compromised on a blue-green color.

"That will be more dignified," remarked Mrs. Slig.

Presently Billy Skittels arrived, and Mr. Slig explained what was wanted.

"I think it would be a good idea to hang the tub from the ceiling by wires," said Mr. Slig. "Hang it right under the leak, high enough so we won't bump it with our heads. The pipe can be run from the tub through the wall, and we won't be bothered any more in rainy weather."

"That's a mighty good plan," said Mr. Skittels, "but don't you think it would be much cheaper and easier to mend the leak in the roof?"

Mr. and Mrs. Slig looked at each other in astonishment.

"Why, of course!" exclaimed Mr. Slig. "Isn't it funny we never thought of that? Sometimes, Mr. Skittels, I think I'm a little dumb."

OH GEE, KIDDO, WONDERFUL!

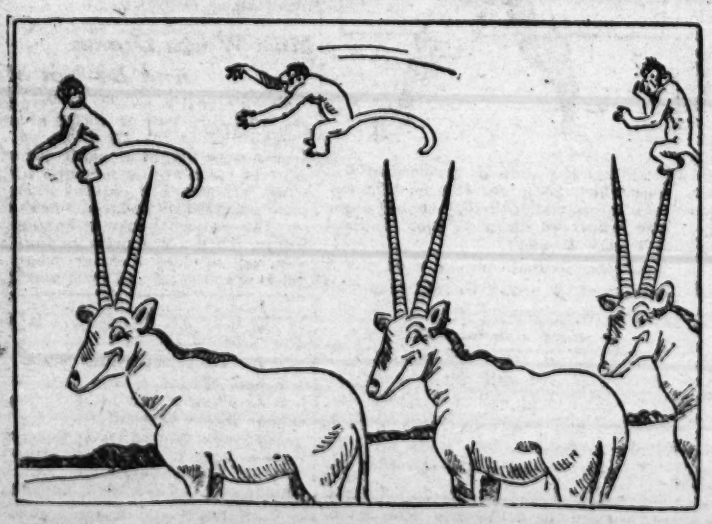

"Just think, three thousand seals were used to make fur coats last year!"

"Ain't it wonderful, what they can train animals to do nowadays?"

Ambitious Freshman (to Senior): "How did you become such a wonderful orotor?"

Senior: "I began addressing envelopes."

MR. MONK'S NEW ADVENTURES IN JUNGLEPOOL

Mr. Monk arranged a "Point to Point" race in Junglepool. He'd never seen one, so he had to fix it up according to his own ideas. All the best jumpers in Monkey Land entered for the race, but one of them finished it. The first part of the course was not too difficult for an active monkey, though one of them complained of pins and needles in his feet. (Mr. Monk said he would be called a "tenderfoot" if he lived in America), but—

It was the last jump that was too much for the monkey. In addition to being a water jump, they ere expected to land on the points of a Kudus' twisted horns. Mr. Monk had to throw a lifebuoy to each one in turn, as he fell into the water. One of the monkeys said he was all right up to the last jump, but that double corkscrew affair at the other side of the water would prevent any monkey from jumping straight.

body but I have not spent much time during the later years in worrying about what particular body I shall have over there. According to the scientists the body changes every seven years. If that be true, I have one little more than exchange an old body for a new one during the more than sixty years that I have lived. I had a baby body and a boy's body, then the body of a young man, and so on until I am now well along with my ninth body. I do not know which one of these will be best for me in the next world, but I know that the God who made this world and gave me an existence in it will give me, in the and beyond, the body that will best serve me there.

Neither have we any assurance that the perfections of the mind survive the day of death. We spend a great deal of time on the mind, for this is an age of intellectual enthusiasm. My experience has not been different from the experience of others. My mother taught me at home until I was ten; then my parents sent me to the public school until I was fifteen; then I spent two years in an academy preparing for college; then four years in college and then two years in a law school. After nearly twenty years of schooling I took part in my last "commencement," and then I began to learn and have been learning ever since. I have accumulated something of history, something of science, a bit of poetry and philosophy, and I have read speeches without number. I have accumulated a large amount of information on politics and politicians that I know I shall not need in Heaven, if Heaven is half as good a place as I expect it to be. How much of the intellectual wealth that we have so laboriously acquired can we carry with us? We do not know.

Heart Virtues Live.

But we know that that which is spiritual does not die—that the heart virtues will accompany us when we enter the future life. In the parable of the tares, Christ explains that, just as the tares and the wheat grow together until the harvest, so the righteous and the unrighteous live together in this world, but that on the day of judgment they shall be separated. Then shall the righteous "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." We have no promise that the body will shine even as a star, or that the mind will shine even as one of the planets, but the sun in its splendor is used to illustrate the brightness with which those will shine who are counted righteous in that day.

I esteem it a privilege to be permitted to present the claims of the larger life to which Jesus, the Christ, calls all of the children of men. Why will one choose a life that is small and contracted, when there is within his reach the life that is full and complete—the Larger Life? Why will he be content with the pleasures of the body and the joys of the mind when he can have added to them the delights of the spirit? How can he delay acceptance of Christ's offer to ennoble that which he has, and to add to it the things that are highest and best and most enduring? This is the life that Christ brought to light when He came that men might have life and have it more abundantly.

VI. The Value of the Soul.

The fact that Christ dealt with this subject is proof conclusive that it is important, for He never dealt with trivial things. When Christ focused attention upon a theme it was because it was worthy of consideration—and Christ weighed the soul. He presented the subject, too, with surpassing force; no one will ever add to what He said. Christ used the question to give emphasis to the thought which He presented in regard to the soul's value.

On one side He put the world and all the wealth that one can accumulate, all the fame to which one can aspire, and all the happiness that one can covet; and on the other side He put the soul, and asked the question that has come ringing down the centuries: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

There is no compromise here—no partial statement of the matter. He leaves us to write one term of the equation ourselves. He gives us all the time we desire, and allows the imagination to work to the limit, and when we have gathered together into one sum all things but the soul, He asks—What if you gain it all—All—ALL, and lose the soul? What is the profit?

Is Question of World.

Some have thought the soul question a question of the next world only, but it is a question of this world also; some have thought the soul question a Sabbath day question only, but it is a week-day question as well; some have thought the soul question a question for the ministers alone, but it is a question which we all must meet. Every day and every week, every month and every year, from the time we reach the period of accountability until we die, we—each of us—all of us, weigh the soul; and just in proportion as we put the soul above all things else we build character; the moment we allow the soul to become a matter of merchandise, we start on the downward way.

Tolstoy says that if you would investigate the career of a criminal it is not sufficient to begin with the commission of a crime; that you must go back to that day in his life when he deliberately trampled upon his conscience and did that which he knew to be wrong. And so with all of us, the turning point in the life is the day in his life when he deliberately trampled upon his conscience and did that which he knew to be wrong. And so with all of us, the turning point in life is the day when we surrender the soul for something that for the time being seems more desirable.

Most of the temptations that come to us to sell the soul come in connection with the getting of money. The Bible says, "The love of money is the root of all evil." Or, as the Revised Version gives it, "A root of all kinds of evil."

Because so many of our temptations come through the love of money and the effort to obtain it, it is worth while to consider the laws of accumulation. We must all have money; we need food and clothing and shelter, and money is necessary for the purchase of these things. Money is not an evil in itself—money is, in fact, a very useful servant. It is bad only when it becomes the master, and the love of it is hurtful only because it can, and often does, crowd out the love of nobler things.

Collect Earnings Only.

Since we must all use money and must in our active days store up money for the days when our strength fails, let us see if we can agree upon God's law of rewards.

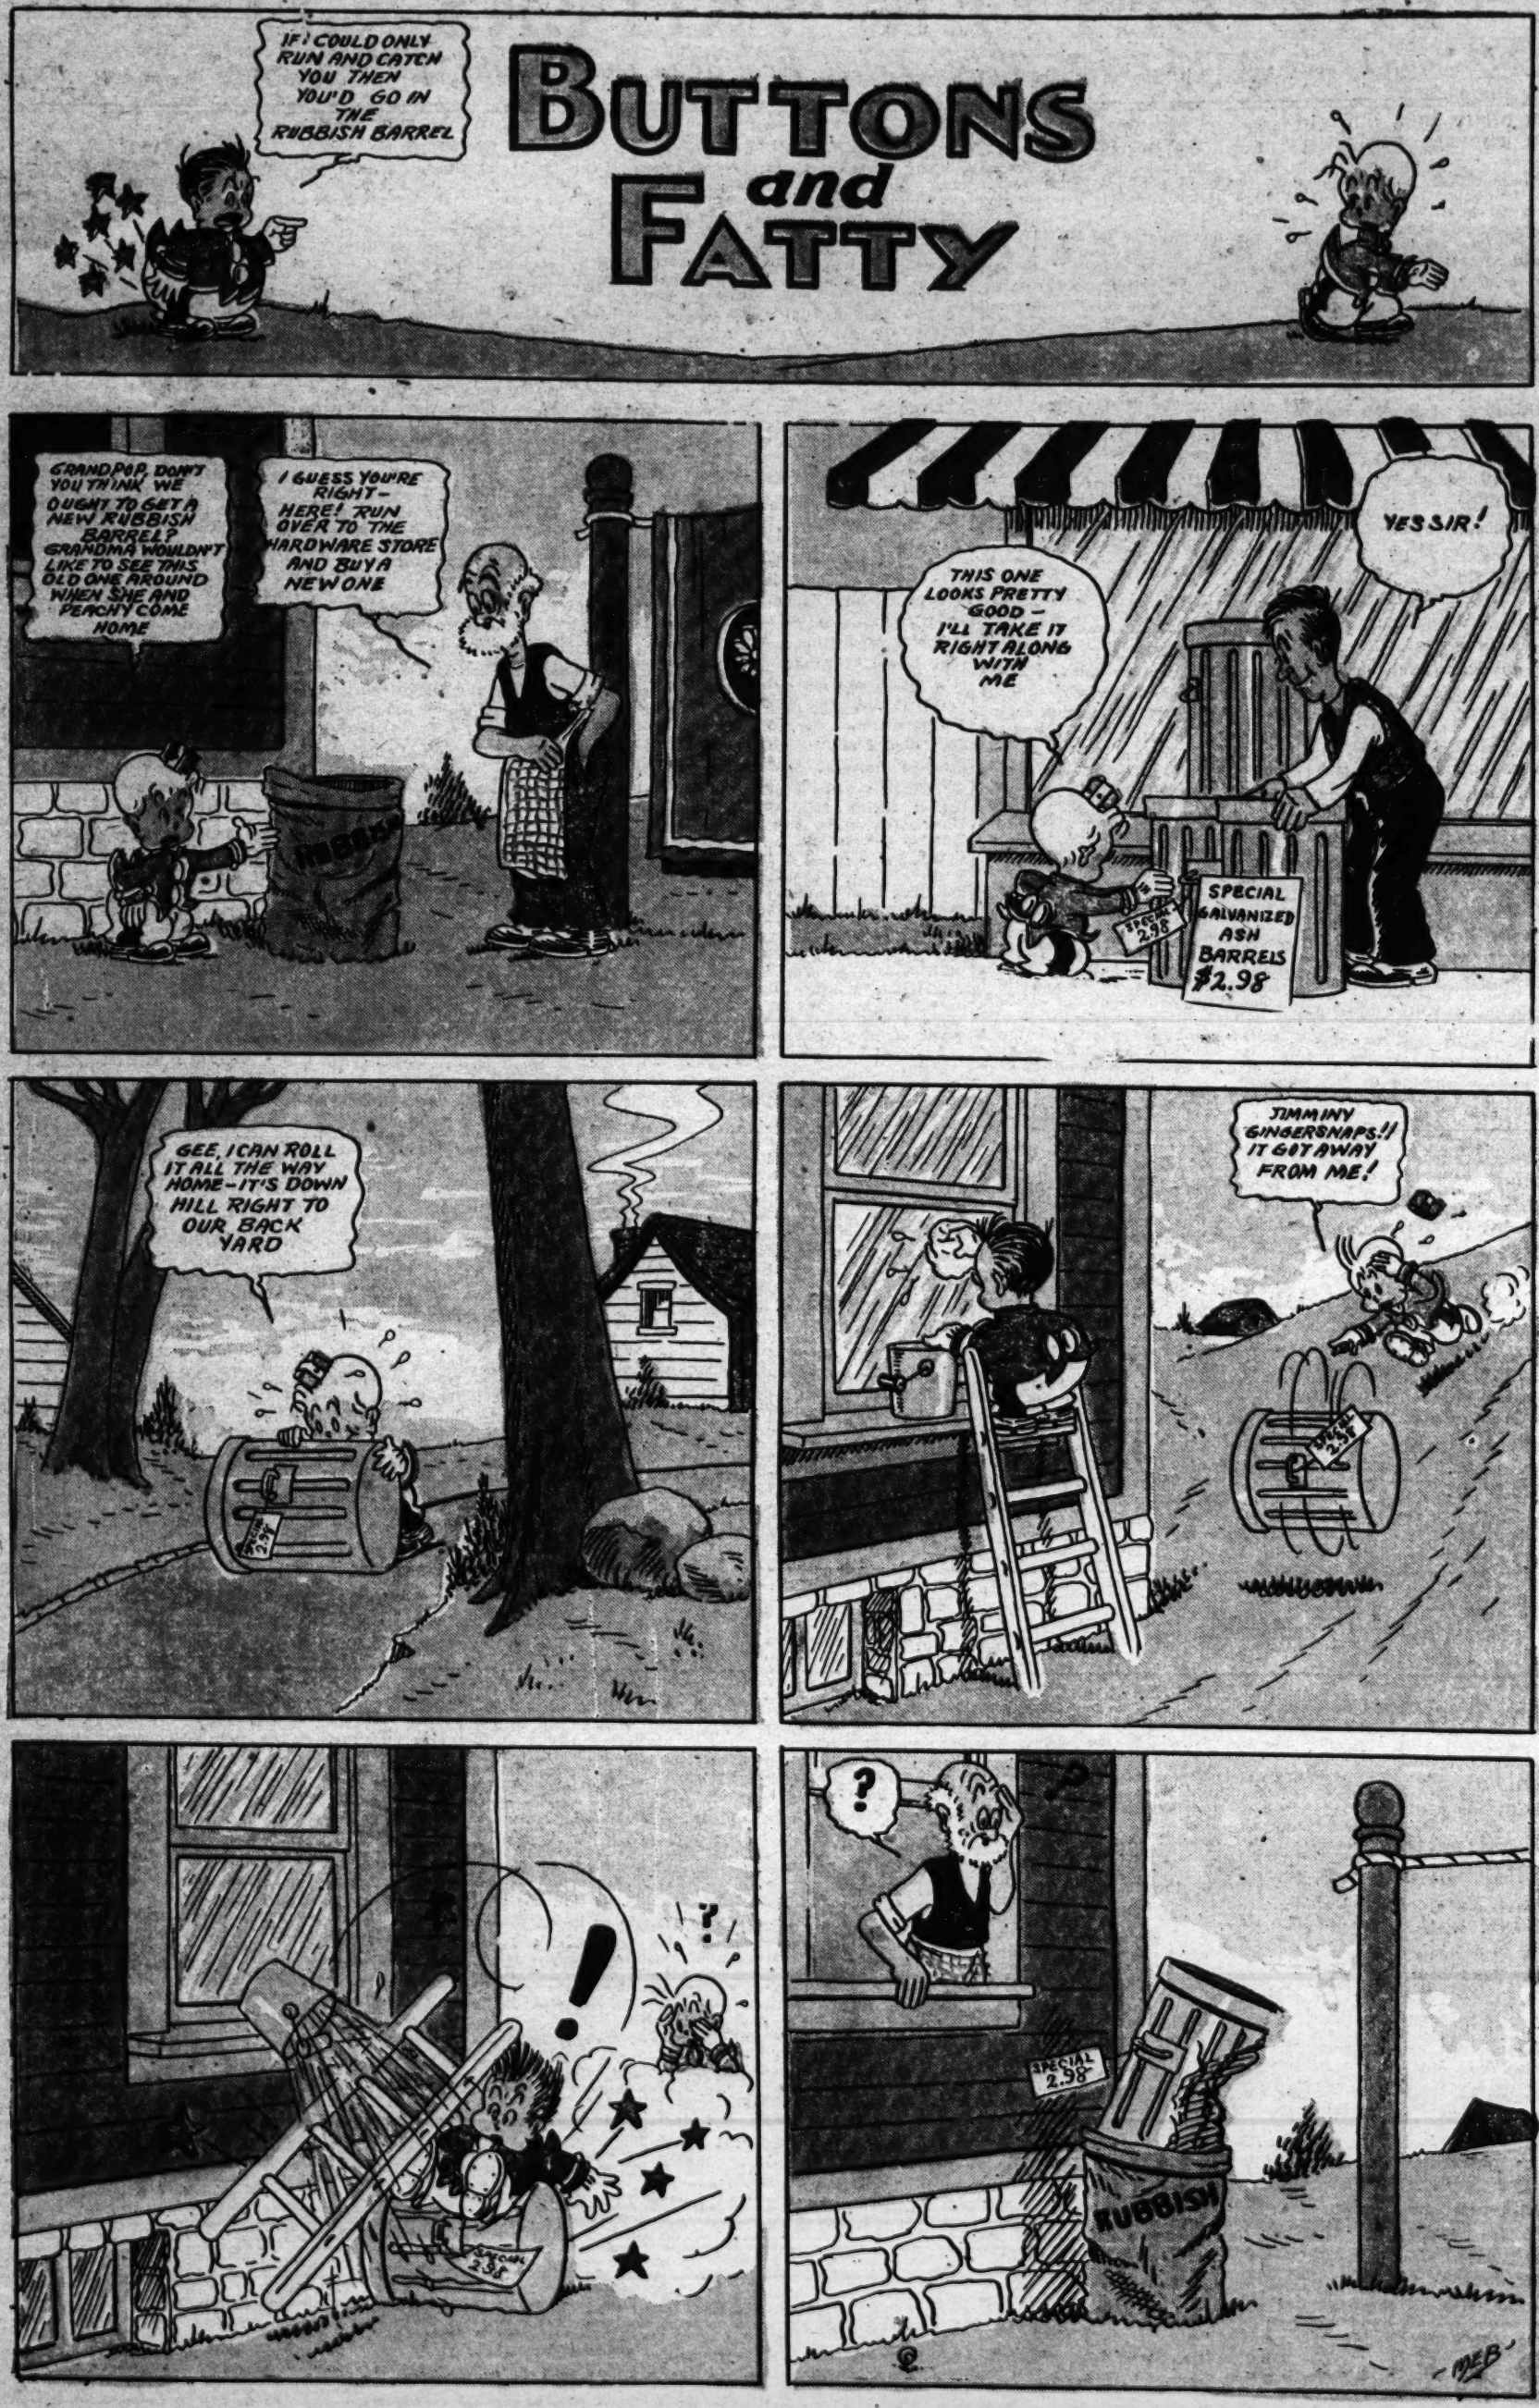

How much money can a man rightfully collect from society? Surely, there can be no disagreement here. He cannot rightfully collect more than he honestly earns. If a man collects more than he earns, he collects what somebody else has earned, and we call it stealing if a man takes that which belongs to another. Not only is a man limited in his collection of what he honestly earns, but will an honest man desire to collect more than he earns?

If a man cannot rightfully collect more than he honestly earns, it is then a matter of utmost importance to know how much money a man can honestly earn more than fairly to this, namely, that a man cannot honestly earn more than fairly measures the value of the service which he renders to society. I cannot conceive of any way of earning money except to give to society a service equivalent in value to the money collected. This is a fundamental proposition and it is important that it should be clearly understood, for if one desires to collect largely from society he must be prepared to render a large service to society; and our schools and colleges, our churches and all other organizations for the improvement of man have for one of their chief objects the enlargement of the capacity for service.

There is an apparent exception in the case of an inheritance but it is not a real exception, for if the man who leaves the money has honestly earned it, he has already given society a service of equivalent value and, therefore, has a right to distribute it. And money received by inheritance is either payment for service already rendered, or payment in advance for service to be rendered. No right-minded person will accept money, even by inheritance, without recognizing the obligation it imposes to render a service in return. In fact, most of the blessings which we receive come to us in such a way that we cannot distinguish the donors and must make our return to the whole public. If one is not compelled to work for himself he has the larger pleasure of working for the public.

l of the characters in the plot are sh and into their mouths have put many sophistocated and epi- matic speeches. There's a man e play whom one character says born to be a correspondent." e're the two exceptionally spoiled hters, and the father who is the pampered one of the lot.

his father is debonairly performed Cyril Maude, of "Grumpy," and n't We All?" fame. Mr. Maude, so many of his profession, had to "These Charming People" e public his intention of retiring the stage. However, these so- d retirements and "farewell s" of stage favorites must never aken too seriously. Mr. Maude s us in the Arlen play a most fin- d and polished performance.

dna Best was brought all the way from England to appear as one the daughters, and the marvelous nner in which she is being received, t make her feel it was well worth trip.

"These Charming People" is an- er play you don't want to be told much about. It's crammed full Arlen conversation, so you know at to expect anyway.

HE supper-clubs are now going at full blast. At the Club Lido the er night—and I think the Lido, ere Maurice and Barbara Bennett dancing, draws about the pick of night-club crowd—I saw among ople you know, the Jerry Sellars, George Fletchers, the Homer rvises and the D'Laigle Munds. en, too, I saw Constance Talmadge th three rather natty-looking young- ers. Sessue Hayakawa was also esent. So were Lila Lee and her sband, James Kirkwood.

The night Sterling Holloway, of Cedartown, opened in the new revue Ciro's, I saw a very brilliant crowd, ostly, however, of the theater set. chard Barthelmess had a party for r, and Noel Coward also gave a rty. Again was Constance Talmadge hand, and this time also Norma. I so saw Marie Saxon, of "Merry, erry," doing a Sara Schoen. Most the "Garrick Gaieties" crowd was ere to root for Sterling, who got er wonderfully. By the way, Noel oward told me he thought young Mr. olloway was a genius. Fannie Ward d her husband, Jack Dean, were on nd and so was Ben Lyon.

AUGHT," the play in which the sorrel-topped Gladys Hurlburt to be seen, is in some respects rather n unusual play. It's first act is de- idedly light, and I have a strong spicion that "Caught" would have en a much better play had it con- ued in that vein throughout. As is, there is a murder in the second t, and a suicide in the third, with thing in the first act to indicate such oings-on are to follow.

This first act concerns itself mostly with a rather hard-up young man, who to get out of his financial difficulties, grees to marry an elderly and decid- dly wealthy woman. Now, of course, may be mistaken, but the bright gleam I saw in the eyes of several oung gentlemen during the intermis- ion made me wonder if they were wondering where—er—more of these oolish but lucrative ladies could be located. However, after our "hero" had found it necessary to shoot and kill his maturing wife in the second act, and then kill himself in the third, I for one, decided maybe after all such a plan has its drawbacks.

Gladys Hurlburt plays the part of the girl he was really in love with and I thought she gave a very wistful and winsome performance.

THE Embassy Club—here is one which is not a supper-club, but is conducted strictly (not too strictly) for its members—has as its hostess for the Saturday and Sunday tea and dinner-dances, Mervene Chapman, a most charming girl who attended Oakmere with Ernestine Campbell Bruner, Jennie Robinson, Nell Sims and Caroline Shivers Hardwick. She also flew around a bit this past summer with Sara Schoen and Grace Goldsmith.

Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, whom no one is ignorant enough not to have heard or read of, is at the head of the club, in fact it was at a dinner at the Embassy, Mrs. Wilson recently announced the engagement of her daughter, Louisa, to David Turner.

The winter tea-dances, in particular, are going to be widely patronized by the debutantes and their boy friends, I feel sure. At a recent Sunday one, I saw lots of them. Mother feels so much more comfortable about daughter being at the Embassy than she does about her being at one of the hotels, where one is really quite liable to meet almost anyone!! Maybe it is this thought which sends so many of the debutantes to the hotel tea-dances.

"CRAIG'S WIFE" is to my mind one of the strongest and most intelligent plays of the year. If I may be allowed to say so, I fear the large number of "Craig's Wives" in the world may not find the treatment accorded them in this play quite to their liking, but there are few, if any, husbands who won't enjoy every minute of it.

"Craig's Wife" is the first play I have seen wherein a wife is condemned for being too fond of her home, too interested in its management. The stage and movies have for years past tried to convince us that all good women just sit at home and rock, while the so-and-so kind flit gaily around. However, in this very smart play of modern home life, we find a wife so wrapped up in her home, so in love with her furniture, etc., that she places her regard for it above her love for her husband. And it is this little tragedy, occurring in many a home today, which serves as the basis of this very excellent play. Mrs. Craig is the sort of person who won't have a vase of roses on the piano for fear the falling petals might hurt the carpet. She almost has a nervous break-down when a flake of ashes gets on her rugs. In other words, she keeps a perfect "house" but no "home" at all. And when the play is over, about all she has got left is her house.

Don't think of missing "Craig's Wife." It's one of the best plays of the year.

IN ORDER that you might know what popular music should be found on your pianos these days, and just what pieces your dance orchestras should be having you dance to, I'll pick out for you the biggest hits now being played in the restaurants, hotels and night-clubs here. Certainly, you hear "Sugar Plum" from "Gay Paree" everywhere you turn, and Irving Berlin's haunting waltz "Remembering" is most popular now. The whistleable "Who?" from "Sunny," is so catchy I believe it will cause Grace Goldsmith to toss aside from her piano, "Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through" the number on which she was still working when last I sat on the ottoman in her music room and listened to her play. "Ukelele Lady" is also very popular, and "Manhattan" and "Sentimental Me and Romantic You" from the "Garrick Gaieties," are still very much in evidence. The "It Must Be Love" number from "Merry, Merry," is making itself heard these days, and so is "Here In Your Arms," from "Dearest Enemy."

In other words, it might be hinted "Indian Love Call" and "Tea For Two" have about had their day and some of the above hits have, as far as New York is concerned, taken their place.

without ever being used before the camera. I asked why I had not been used and was told that I photographed well and they couldn't use me in a prominent place, as they could not have anything detract from the principals. That might be construed as conceit, but I am only telling the truth about what a beauty contest winner may be up against. This happened often while I was doing extra work. I practically backed my way into the films. My back adorned a number of scenes. If it had been a beautiful back I might have become as famous as Kitty Gordon. It was certainly photographed enough.

"But I stuck it out and finally was chosen for bits. In the meantime my makeup improved and I was learning something of camera technique. I did my first small part with screen credit almost a year after I reached Hollywood. After the twinkle in this star of hope faded I had to go back to extra work and while working in a mob scene tore a ligament in my ankle, which bothered me painfully for a couple of months. I had to work on when work was available. It was getting scarcer, and as my ankle had to be kept strapped I could not do any fashion work, which was really the work that kept bread in our mouths during the time.

FINALLY the day arrived when we were down to our last quarter and no work in sight. I had a string of pearls, not valuable ones, you may be sure, but I thought good for a dollar loan, perhaps. I walked to the doctor's for a treatment, then 18 blocks to the home of an elderly friend who had told me she would befriend me if I needed help. Arriving at her home I found she had departed for the week-end. Mother was with me. We started back at low ebb, you may believe. We were so blue we couldn't talk.

"I never saw so much food displayed in windows before. Every window we passed seemed to have a pie, a bread loaf, fried chicken, or something to tease. We came to a Western Union office. I decided to wire my uncle to send me a few dollars. I wrote out the telegram, and handed it to the clerk to be sent C. O. D. She told me I would have to make a deposit covering the charge, as they did not take telegrams for money C. O. D., otherwise. I was so reduced I couldn't afford to send a telegram collect.

"We managed to get home and to bed. About 11 o'clock the phone rang. I was asked to report at 12 o'clock that night for a try-out at a down-town theater. I borrowed car fare from the landlady and went.

"There were 100 or more girls there, all in bathing suits. I had never worn a bathing suit on a stage before, but the review was to pay $30 a week. I needed the money. So it had to be done. I was embarrassed, but I went through with it and was one of the 30 girls chosen. This gave me three weeks' salary.

"Then I was entered in the contest for Miss Los Angeles, who was to go to Atlantic City for the big contest. I came second, and the next day I signed a contract to do the second lead in "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," with Elliot Dexter. That was my first real part. In this picture they changed my name to Barbara Worth, as they thought it a better screen name, but I changed back as I was known to the studios by my own name. I finished the year doing bits in pictures and fashion shows, just earning enough to get by on.

"Later I won another beauty contest and the title of Miss Hollywood, after which I got my first real lead in a comedy with Harry Langdon. Other leads were offered me and I kept on until I did the blond vamp in Harold Lloyd's picture, "The Freshman," which gave me work for five months. Since finishing it I have had two other contracts that were satisfactory, so that now my salary ranges from $125 to $300 a week, which isn't large compared to some of the stars' salaries, but is, after all, a much better one than I could make in any other business.

"The work is hard and sometimes dangerous. There is no eight-hour law in pictures. I have worked from 8:30 one morning until 7 the next. Having won several beauty contests, it would be natural to expect that my work would be along those lines. As a matter of fact, I have done more westerns than anything else.

"When first starting picture work the calls usually required me to furnish my own clothes, and even with a moderately nice wardrobe of everyday things it seemed as though they always asked for something I did not have. I had to rent them. The rent would dig into the $7.50 a day earned. Then when car fare, lunch money and a 50-cent commission to the extra bureau that called me was counted out of the day's pay I considered myself lucky if I came out even. When I discovered I couldn't pay my living expenses out of my salary as an extra I had to find other means of earning money. This is why experienced actors and actresses always advise beginners to come with a few hundred dollars saved up.

"Fortunately I had had a little experience posing and got commercial photography work to do, which paid me $5 a sitting. I hardly got more than one or two a week, so I applied for work as a fashion show model. I could never have remained in pictures if I had not been able to bolster up my income with this extra money.

"There are picture people making big salaries who are actually poorer than others on a modest but steady income. It takes a great deal of money to live up to their reputations and to keep up appearances."

am going to do it. I promise you again."

"Pah, liar! Your promise is like a line written on water!"

"This particular promise," he insisted grimly, "will be like a line carved on stone. But, first, I need your help in this trouble which Gibrizli Pasha made for me."

"I don't care. Die!"

"Don't be such a silly little fool. You need me as badly as I need you. How, in the name of Allah, can I help you if I should be arrested and tried and, without much doubt, executed? Consider, crusher of hearts! A dead horse cannot eat grass."

She clapped her hands delightedly.

"Clever, clever Circassian!" she exclaimed. "As clever as Beelzebub! I —I am sorry for the insults which I heaped upon your head, Shamyl."

"Your insults are second only to your kisses in exquisite spiciness, little Fathma."

"O," she sighed, "how I wish I were in love with you!"

"And I with you. By the Prophet —we two would make a splendid couple."

She did not understand the blighting self-irony of his words.

"You will do it soon?" she asked, touching his hands with her lips.

"Very soon. Perhaps next Saturday. I shall have a talk with the manager of the hotel and with some of my friends at the foreign embassies. Nor am I doing it altogether because of your threats, but also because—ah —" his hawkish, predatory features hardened, his mouth curled into a thin, downward curve—"because that girl—I love her—I want her . . ."

"And yet," mocked Bibi Fathma, "there is still your oath to O'Malley's mother, the woman who was more than mother to you! The oath that never, never would you force a woman to give to you what she does not want to give!"

"Be quiet, gypsy!" he cut in roughly.

"I salaam forgiveness," she laughed. "Hayah—but the fringe of the foreign woman's eyelids has taken you into captivity without ransom. Never mind——" as he scowled—"perhaps her kisses will be sweet enough to make you forget the gall-bitter remembrance of your oath. Some of these slim, cool virgins can kiss—when taught by a Circassian."

"Yes," he admitted, his ill humor soothed by his vanity, "at least if this Circassian should be alive—and not executed as a traitor."

"Don't worry, Shamyl. I shall talk to the Sultan. I shall tell him that Sabri Bey is a liar amongst the liars."

"This time it will need more than your mere word to guarantee my loyalty and save my neck. You see—if they torture Hakki Yussef into a confession—manage to bring some sort of proof against me . . ."

"I shall think out another plan. Give me a little time."

"Hurry!" he said. "My neck hurts already."

"Let me see . . ."

They were debating ways and means when a servant entered and announced a visitor.

"Who?" asked the gypsy.

"Zado Kaboolian effendi."

"O," said the prince, "the rich Armenian banker—that favorite pet of the doubtless disinterested and doubtless humanitarian British government?"

"The same!" exclaimed Bibi Fathma, though she did not understand the ironic political allusions. "May the devil cut out his liver and poison therewith a thousand snakes!"

"Why all the abuse?" laughed Tcherkessky. "I admit that I don't exactly like him myself. He is against the Young Turks, yet more against the Russians and, within his pro-British proclivities, claims to be loyal to the Sultan. Still—what has he ever done to you?"

"Last year he lent me fifty thousand pastries."

"No reason to hate him."

"Reason enough!"

"I suppose he took as security the cow and the unborn calf? He prayed to his native gods of compound interest and made you pay through your adorable little nose?"

"He tried to collect the interest by making love to me—ah—the pig—the cousin-in-blood to a dung heap!" She turned to the servant: "Throw the Armenian out! See that his unclean head bumps every step of the stairs! Then drag him into the street and kick him painfully toward Pera!"

But all at once she reconsidered.

"No!" she went on. "Ask the effendi to wait ten minutes. Then bring him here. Treat him with the utmost courtesy. Tell him I shall be happy to see him."

THE servant withdrew while Tcherkessky inquired the cause for Bibi Fathma's sudden change of front.

"Zado Kaboolian is going to save your life," she answered.

"O! How?"

"There is no time now to explain all the details, Shamyl. But the plan came to me, and it is a good plan. I want to know one thing, though . . ."

"If I can assist you . . . ?"

"You can. I understand——" she winked shamelessly—"that Yar Ali Bey was murdered by robbers?"

Slowly he returned the wink.

"So I have been told."

"And the robbers took all the eunuch's famous collection of jewels, including the emerald carved in the shape of a parrot which Sultan Abdul Hamid gave to him once . . . you know, the emerald which created all the scandal and gossip in the Dolma Bagtcheh palace, although the world outside the palace walls never heard of it? You remember?"

"I remember both the gossip and the emerald."

"Where is this emerald now?"

"How should I know?" fenced Tcherkessky.

Bibi Fathma shook her head.

"Come, Shamyl," she said. "Let us be frank with each other. Let soul speak naked to soul, and the head answer for both. You have this emerald?"

"Yes. And I wish I didn't. It is beautiful. I did not have the heart to throw it away. But it is a dangerous trinket to have about the house. As soon as I get home I shall smash it into bits."

"You will do nothing of the sort. I love emeralds. You will bring it to me."

"But . . ."

"The emerald, too, I need to save your neck, my Shamyl. The emerald —and the Armenian pig's unclean passion—and my own cleverness. Go now. Use the back way through the palace garden. You must not be seen by Zado Kaboolian. He is as suspicious as a flea on a Tartar."

Tcherkessky bowed and left.

Zado Kaboolian was tall and lean and angular. The nose, the uptilted chin that rose defiantly to meet the lower lip, the eyebrows, the long, thin mouth, the curve of the narrow hips, the very feet in their yellow babouche slippers, the curiously elongated head covered by the crimson fez—everything about the man was in sharp, keen angles. And sharply keen and angular, too, was his brain—a brain that could sniffle out gold in a Pasha's palace or a pauper's wattle-and-daub hut, in an open field, a cemetery, or beneath the eaves of a forgotten, ruined church. Indeed, bazaar rumor had it that gold came to his hand unasked, like a dog or a courtezan. Gold and the power which it brought was his lode star, his life; and, at that, he was no hypocrite, did not try to cloak his greed with the lying mantle of "civilization" or "progress."

"I love gold," he used to say, "as a goat loves salt. Whatever I want to buy. That's what gold is for."

"Such was his simple and ruthless philosophy which had stood him in good stead until he had met Bibi Fathma, strictly in a business way. She had needed money badly. There was no limit to her extravagance but a limit of necessity to the Sultan's generosity. Falling head over heels in love with her, Zado Kaboolian had tried to express his love, again strictly in a business way, by threatening her with bailiff and sheriff and tipstaff, with Turkish kadi and British consulat judge when she could or would not pay, and by offering her more money when she laughed at his threats while his passion grew.

It was a new experience for him: this gypsy's contempt spattering him with foul invective—him who, wherever he went in Constantinople or London or Paris, was treated with the respect which is gold's symphonic counter-point. And still his passion increased as steadily, whenever he called on her, she thumbed her nose at him, figuratively as literally.

So he was in somewhat of a trepidation when he entered her presence.

"Ah!" said Zado Kaboolian, "your locks are like female snakes! When I think of you—in the purple nights—the blood dances in my veins in rythmic measures! Your feet have a golden touch! And as to your hands —soft hands—scented hands—knowing hands . . . ahee—ahee . . ."

He was silent for a moment, fully expecting her to interrupt him with a volley of unvarnished remarks anent his inner and outer man. He had already braced himself against the shock of her vituperative attack; and he blinked, gasped, swallowed, rubbed his eyes when the gypsy, instead of calling him a pig and a father of pigs, looked at him with melting eyes while a deep sigh escaped her lips.

"Zado," she whispered. "Is it true? Do you really love me?"

"O," he stammered—"I—I . . ." he could not speak.

"Zado!" she went on gently, stretching out her left hand. "If it gives you pleasure to touch my fingers with your lips . . ."

At once he was on his knees by the side of her couch, covering her hands with little birdlike kisses.

"Ah—my Zado!" Again she sighed. "I struggled—struggled! But your passion—your devotion—it is so strong! And I—Allah, Allah!—I am only a weak woman!"

This time the Armenian had no need to recall his private secretary's lyrical, carefully rehearsed terms. His words, raucous, breathless, staccato, were a genuine expression of the passion that was racking him body and soul. He bent over her, his twitching hands caressing her shoulders, his lips close to hers.

So he poured out his love, and then, quite typically, he added:

"I am richer than a dozen sultans. Rich and generous! I shall cover you with gold from head to foot!"

"O, . . . she gave a cry like a wounded animal. She pushed him away. She looked at him reproachfully.

the greatest observers on psychic phenomena have confessed that when it comes to explanations of such baffling questions they are up against a blank wall. Yet it does no good to deny the existence of unexplained phenomena.

* * * *

WE know that phantoms have been seen and heard, that ghosts have appeared, that death warnings have been flashed across thousands of miles without apparent means of communication. To laugh about such matters shows as much ignorance as hidden fear, I think. There are of course credulous simpletons who have a blind faith in every spinster who calls herself a spiritualistic medium, but the thing needs investigation. Houdini cannot be taken as the last and final authority. The Unknown World is greater and perhaps more important than the Known. It is for an enlightened generation to study the facts of mystical sixth sense, clairvoyance, mesmerism, hypnotism and all such phenomena. Let us distrust premature ready-made theories, but let us discuss everything, study everything, analyze everything and do it all without prejudice or bias.

HOW MANY SPOTS ARE THERE?

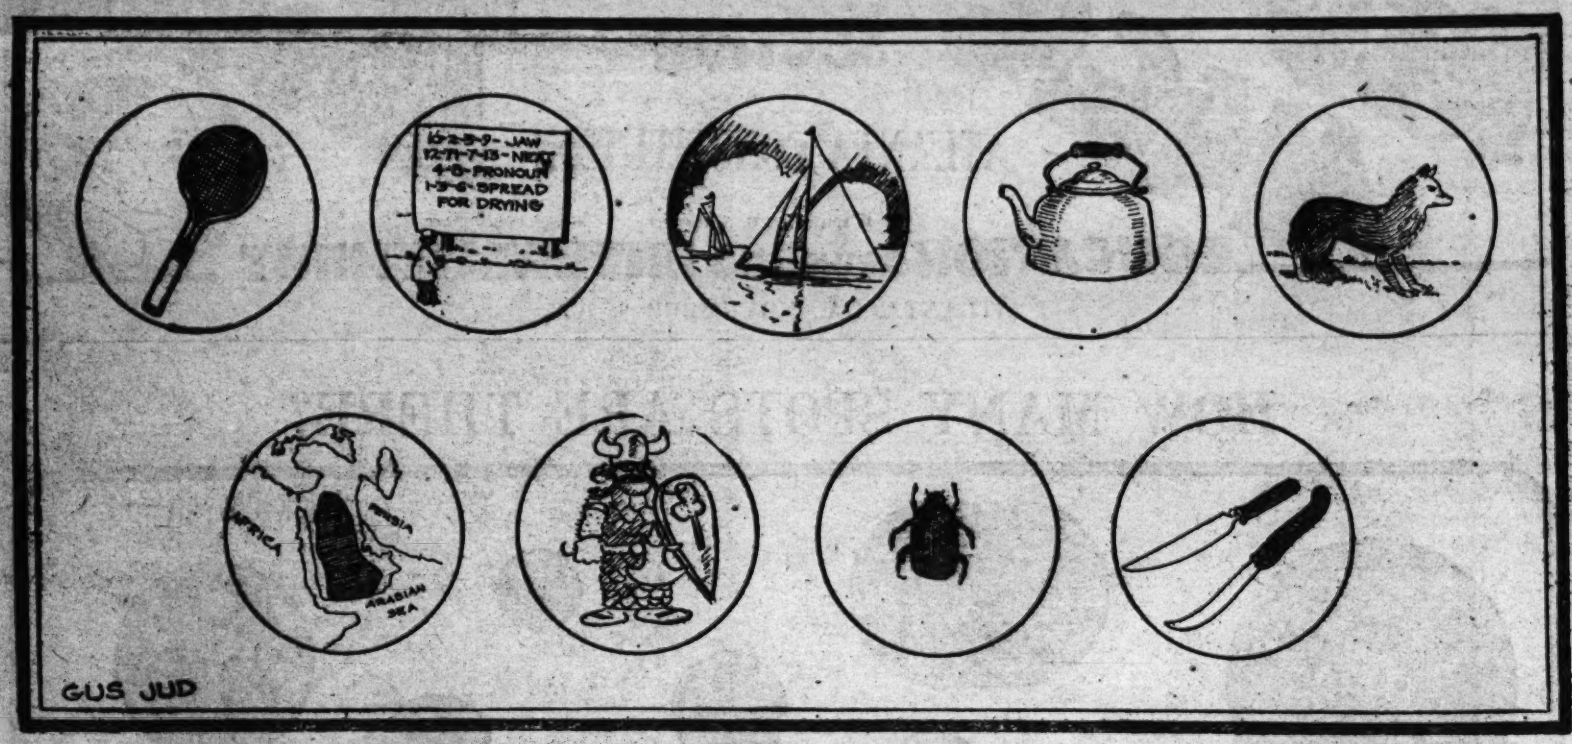

Here is a chance to test your ability to estimate accurately by the use of the eye. The spots on the drawing above have been deliberately arranged as to size so as to deceive the eye at the first casual glance. Hang this page on the wall, stand about ten feet away, and look at it for not more than five seconds. Then write down your estimate of the number of spots in the drawing. Get your friends and relatives to try the test with you. When all have made their estimates, a count of the dots will show the winner, who is, of course, the one whose number is nearest the actual total.

You will be surprised to find how widely different are the estimates of your friends. There may be a divergence of has high as twenty between the scores of the winner and the one whose number is farthest away.

WHAT CITY IS BURIED HERE?

Here is a puzzle to test your knowledge of geography as well as your ingenuity. Each of the above objects may be described by a word of six letters. If you guess them correctly and write them one below the other in the correct order, you will find that their initials, reading downward, will spell the name of the capital of one of the northernmost inhabited islands in the world.

THE DISAPPEARING SQUARE

By Sam Loyd

You remember the problem of the checkerboard which, when cut up properly and put together in a special way, gave a figure of sixty-five squares instead of the original sixty-four. We presented it in these columns not so long ago. Above, Mr. Loyd shows how the checkerboard was cut into four pieces, which, when put together in the manner shown in the lower drawing, produced a rectangle with apparently sixty-five squares in it. The extra square, you recall, came from the fact that the line between 1—3 and 2—4 is not a straight line; the pieces do not fit exactly, and the space left by the bad fit is just one square inch.

Now Mr. Loyd presents a new problem on the same basis. Take the upper figure—the original checkerboard—and cut it out into the four pieces, 1, 2, 3, and 4, as shown; the puzzle is to fit them together in such a way that you obtain a figure containing apparently only sixty-three squares. Of course you are not permitted to have any of the pieces overlap. We have shown you how to gain a square in this cutout; now see if you can lose one.

THE MULTIPLICATION PROBLEM

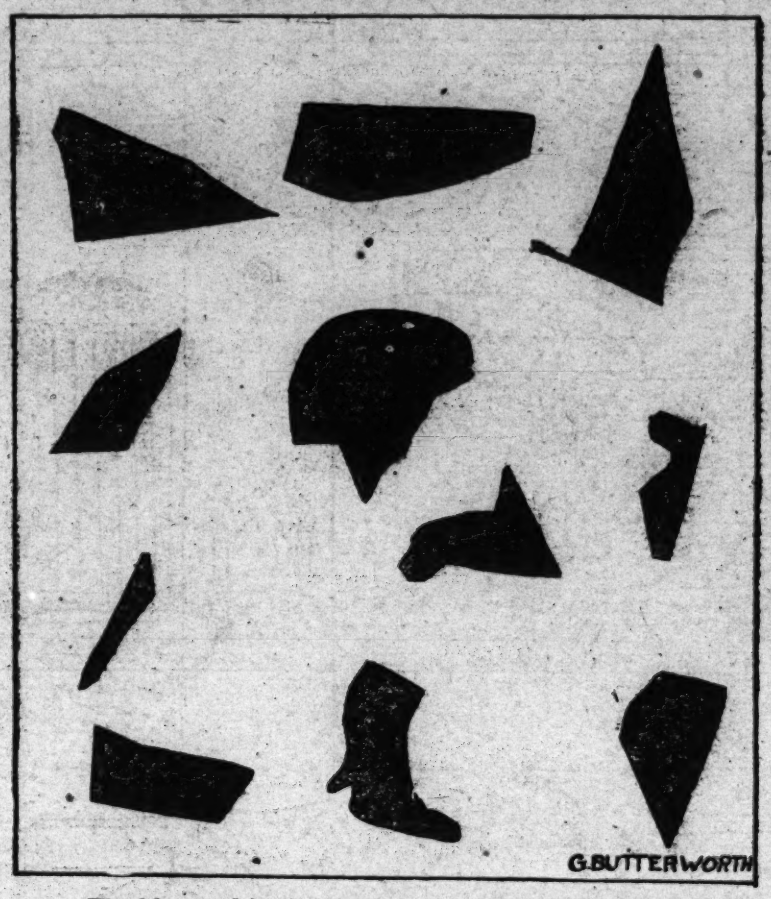

By Sam Loyd

Can you substitute figures for the letters on the blackboard so that when the first two are multiplied the result will be as shown? In other words, find a number which when multiplied by itself gives a four-figure result of which the last three figures are the same.

The big word in the title of this cutout means "Before history was written." If you cut out the pieces carefully and put them together correctly you can make a fine picture of one of the huge monsters that roamed the world in those ages ever so long ago.

Little Miss Muffet sat on a tuffet
Eating her curds and whey;
There came a big spider and sat down beside her
And frightened Miss Muffet away.

Here is the spider coming down on one of her threads. Miss Muffet has already been frightened away, but she is hiding in the picture. Old Mother Hubbard has joined her. Can you find them?

WHAT IS WRONG WITH THIS PICTURE?

Here is presented a scene in the lobby of the well known Anyold Hotel, Anytown, U. S. A. Our artist has, as usual, made a number of mistakes in his drawing; he explains that being on the road, where he got the idea of the lobby scene, affects his health so that he loses his faculty of accuracy. We have our own opinion about that, but—at any rate, there are nineteen mistakes in the picture. For instance, the man seated on the bench is wearing only one spat. Can you find the other eighteen errors?

CLARE T'GOODNESS, CHILE, YO AM ALLUS EATIN'—YO' AM DE MOS' EATENESS BOY AH EBER DID SEE

GOOD LAND, ELMER WHERE'S YOUR MANNERS? EATING PIE LIKE THAT! HOW MANY TIMES HAVE I TOLD YOU TO USE A FORK?

GEE WHIZ, MA, YOU ALLUS SAY FINGERS WERE MADE BEFORE FORKS.

YOURS WEREN'T, AND DON'T LET ME SEE YOU EATING THAT WAY AGAIN.

AWRIGHT, MA, I'LL USE A FORK AFTER THIS.

I HOPE YOU WILL, HONEY, I WILL BE SO PROUD OF YOU FOR THERE ISN'T ANYTHING I LIKE TO SEE A BOY HAVE MORE THAN GOOD TABLE MANNERS

HEY, LOTTIE, WHERE D'YA KEEP YER FORKS? GIMMIE ONE RIGHT AWAY

WOT DE GOODNESS YO WANT WIF A FORK?- NEX' YO'LL BE WANTIN' A IRONIN' BO'RD OR STEWIN' KETTLE OR SUMTHIN'

LOTTIE!

YAS MA'AM, ISE COMIN' DIS MINIT

NOT SO BAD NOT SO BAD!!!

MISSUS TUGGLE, COME HEAH, DIS INSTUNT!!!

JUS' LOOK WOT DAT ELMER DID ET ALL DAT PIE - EBER BIT UV IT'N' DERE'S NOT A MORSEL LEFT FO' MISTAH TUGGLE'S DINNAH

ELMER, WHAT IN THE WORLD POSSESSED YOU TO EAT ALL THAT PIE?

CRIME-A-NENTLY! MA, I WAS JUST PRACTISING EATIN' WITH A FORK- A FELLER CAN'T LEARN A NEW STUNT LIKE THAT WITHOUT LOTS O' PRACTICE

WELL, YOUNG MAN, I'LL PRACTISE A FEW STUNTS ON YOU COME ALONG.

WOOD Shed

THIS'S A FINE WAY TO ACT- BAWL A FELLER OUT FOR EATIN' WITHOUT A FORK- AN' THEN WHIP HIM FOR TRYIN' TO LEARN HOW

MOON MULLINS.

PARDON ME LADY- BUT YOUR GENTLEMAN FRIEND HASN'T PAID FOR YOUR DINNERS YET

OH-HE'LL BE BACK- WHERE IS YOUR BROTHER MOON, KAYO?

HE'S IN JAIL.

WELL, EGYPT- GET ON YOUR SHAWL- THEY ALWAYS THROW ME OUT OF THESE JOINTS WHEN I CAN'T PAY MY CHECK AND I'M FLAT.

WHAT? YOU DON'T MAKE A SCENE WHILE I'M WITH YOU, MOON MULLINS- RUN OVER TO LORD PLUSHBOTTOM'S HOTEL AND BORROW SOME MONEY FROM HIM- HE JUST MADE A PILE ON A REAL ESTATE DEAL-

LORD PLUSHBOTTOM IS NOT IN.

WELL, RING HIM AGAIN AND ASK HIM WHEN HE'LL BE BACK.

LET THAT GUY'S BAGGAGE GO MUSHMOUTH- MR. PLUSHBOTTOM WON'T ANSWER HIS DOOR OR PHONE SO I WANT YOU TO PEEK IN HIS WINDOW AN' IF HE'S THERE GIVE HIM THIS NOTE.

FEVVEN'S SAKE!

MY WORD!

CLANK!

SHOO!

I WONDER WHAT'S KEEPIN' THAT DUMBHEAD!

WHOOEE!

BOSS- AH TELL YOU MISTAH PLUSHBOTTOM'S COUNTIN' MILLYUNS AN' MILLYUNS OB DOLLAHS IN DERE - AN' HE GOT SO MAD WHEN HE SEEN ME HE SOCKED ME WIFF A BAG FULLA DIMES- AH'M GONNA PEEK AGAIN.

NO YOU AIN'T! I'M GONNA LOOK MYSELF.

FER TH' LOVA MIKE! HE'S COUNTIN' FIVE DOLLAR GOLD PIECES- NOW IF I CAN JES ATTRACT HIS ATTENTION-

KONK!

ALRIGHT 50-50 ON THEM DIMES, MUSHMOUTH- TH' ORIGINAL IDEA WAS MINE. A DOLLAR SIXTY-SEVENTY-EIGHTY-NINETY

MR. & MRS. JACK FROST

NO, SKEEZIX. THINGS ARE NOT DEAD, THEY'RE ONLY SLEEPING AND THEY'RE ALMOST READY TO WAKE UP.

SEE, HERE COME THE WARM SPRING RAINS WHICH WILL SINK DOWN TO THE ROOTS OF THE TREES AND PLANTS AND FLOWERS. THEN WHEN THE SUN COMES AROUND THEY'LL BEGIN TO OPEN THEIR EYES!

NOW THE BUDS ON THE TREES BURST INTO A MILLION TINY LEAVES AND THE GREEN THINGS START TO PUSH THEIR WAY UP THROUGH THE SOFT EARTH

BUG!

ISN'T THIS GLORIOUS, SKEEZIX, TO BE ABLE TO LIE OUT HERE IN THE EARLY SUMMER AND FORGET THE COLD WINTER AND THE RAW WINDS OF SPRING!

LOOK, UNCA WALT! SKEEX GOTTA LOTTA APPLES.

YES SIR! AND WE'RE GOING TO HAVE SWEET CORN FOR SUPPER!

NOW IT'S AUTUMN, THE TIME WHEN SUMMER RAINBOWS FALL INTO THE TREES AND TINT THEIR LEAVES A THOUSAND COLORS.

JACK FROST HAS DONE HIS WORK THE LEAVES HAVE FALLEN. YET IT'S ALL BEAUTIFUL, ISN'T IT

UNCA WALT MAKE SKEEX ANUDDA JACK 'LANTERN?

AND NOW WINTER COMES ALONG AND LOWERS HIS COVERLET OF SNOW OVER ALL LEAFY THINGS AND PUTS THEM TO SLEEP AGAIN. AND ANOTHER YEAR IS DONE

SKEEX ROLL A SNOW MAN JES' LIKE UNCA WALT

THAT LETS HIM HIM OUT-

By Hinkle

I CAN'T DEPEND ON YOU AT ALL, ANYMORE, MR. JOHN AUSTEN-

I TOLD YOU TO RUN OVER AND GET THE GIRL'S NAME AND RUN RIGHT BACK-

WHY, YOU'VE BEEN GONE LONG ENOUGH TO TAKE A CENSUS OF THE COUNTY-

I FOLLOWED YOUR ORDERS TO A T, SIR.

WELL, WHAT KEPT YOU SO LONG?

SHE STUTTERED TERRIBLY-

WINNIE WINKLE

THE BREADWINNER.

BRANNER.

ALL ALONE I'M SO ALL ALONE

ANY MORE ERRANDS FOR ME TO DO, WINNIE?

NO, DARLING! THANKS!

CAN I GO OUT AN PLAY NOW?

SMACK

YES PERRY! YOU'VE BEEN A DEAR, SWEET GOOD BOY!! YOU CAN EVEN PLAY WITH THE RINKEYDINKS IF YOU WANT TO!

OH BOY! WAIT'LL I TELL TH' GANG WINNIE'S GONNA LEMME PLAY WITH 'EM!!

GEE, NOW, I DONT HAFTA BE WORRYIN' ABOUT WINNIE KETCIN' ME!!

'LO, ANNIE! WHERE'S YER BROTHER SPIKE?

HE HADDA GO TO THEE GWAN 'MA!

JES' MY LUCK! SPIKE HAS TO GO SEE HIS GRAN' MOTHER WHEN I'M ALLOWED OUT!

WHERE YA GOIN SPUD?

AW, I GOTTA GO VISIT DE MC CORMICKS WID ME MUDDER AN FADDER!!

CAN Y'BEAT IT? SPIKE AN' SPUD IS BOTH GONE AN' I HAD A SWELL NEW GAME I WAS GONNA SHOW 'EM!

HEY CHINK! C'MON OUT!

I AIN'T ALLOWED OUT TO-DAY!! GOTTA HELP ME MUDDER!

ASH

JUST WHEN I'M ALLOWED OUT, THERE'S NOBODY AROUND TO PLAY WITH!! GEE, I'M SO MAD I COULD BUST SOMEBODY RIGHT IN TH' NOSE!!!

GR-R-RR GR-RRR

'LO PERRY! WANNA PLAY HOUSE? YOU CAN BE TH' PAPA AN' I'LL BE TH' MAMA!!

AW' RIGHT! I'LL PLAY HOUSE WITH YA IF YOU'LL LEMME HOLD YER DOLL?

NEX' TIME I GET ALLOWED OUT-YOU STAY HOME AN' DON'T GO VISITIN' YER GRAN'MAS OR AUNTS — YA HEAR ME??

BAM SOCK BIFF BAM

THAT'S THAT-

BILL WINK

YOU'RE NOT DEAF, YOU HEARD ME.

SO YOU THINK I'M EXTRAVAGANT.

I KNOW YOU ARE-

I'M NO MORE SO THAN ANY OTHER MAN YOU KNOW-

GET OUT! MR. WISKERS IS NOT EXTRAVAGANT.

OH! IS THAT SO!

HE WEARS A NECKTIE UNDER HIS BUSHY BEARD.
